Our G. E. College Bowl team retired as undefeated champion after a fifth victory in the television quiz classic October 24, 1965. As a result of their conquests, team members brought home a massive silver bowl, $10,500 in scholarship funds, and additional respect for these ivy covered walls.

UNDEFEATED CHAMPIONS IN G. E. COLLEGE BOWL

Mental Ability, Brilliant and Audacious Spirit Devastates Opposition

by Professor Sanford J. Smoller
Department of English

It started with the telephone, the herald of the unexpected, the messenger of joy or woe. I was sitting in my office on a quiet afternoon last spring when it rang. "Hello, Sandy, this is Dean Magill. Would you be interested in coaching the College Bowl team? I'm sure you'd do a good job." I hesitated before answering. "Why me?" I asked myself. "Why not?" I thought.

I accepted. "Good, I'll send the material we received from NBC to your office, and Vince Schafmeister in the Alumni Office will assist you as much as possible. If I can do anything to help, please feel free to call on me." I scratched my head and then gently placed the receiver on the cradle. What did I get myself into?

After doing nothing constructive for a week except for reading a pamphlet entitled "So you're going to be on Color TV," which explained that men should wear off-color shirts and dark suits, it suddenly dawned on me that we were scheduled to appear on the first show of the fall season, and that only a month remained before the end of the spring semester. The logic of this revelation was disquieting: I had to assemble a team before the end of the spring semester. It was too simple; there had to be a flaw somewhere. And then I made another discovery. Because I had only been at Dickinson for eight months, I knew of no students who possessed what I considered to be the qualifications for a College Bowl player—breadth of knowledge and quick recall. I turned quickly to my colleagues, and at the same time I advertised to the student body that tryouts for the team were forthcoming. I had, however, overlooked an important point—finals also were forthcoming.

Although I didn't expect to be buried under an avalanche of eager, knowledgeable, willing students, I must confess that when I walked into the room for our first practice session, I felt a little sick, for, if my memory is accurate, only two students were there to greet me. "The others will be here shortly," I said not very convincingly. I was afraid that the two who were there would run out. I think now that I probably edged toward the door to block their escape. A total of six came to the first meeting, two short of two teams. I consoled myself with the thought that things had to get better, because they couldn't get much worse. And I was right.

AFTER further announcements, the situation stabilized to the point where I had more or less ten regular contestants, but I still had no clear idea of their capabilities, and the days were slipping by with appalling rapidity. I needed an objective method to determine the most suitable candidates; I had ruled out grade point averages as being a valid measurement for this type of mental performance, although the Dickinson Team has a cumulative 2.9 average, for averages did not indicate a student's range of experience, his desire, or his response to pressure and competition, the qualities which, I felt, were indispensable in a game situation. Since I regarded the College Bowl solely as a game, a game of agile minds rather than agile bodies, I decided to select my team as a basketball coach selects his—through individual competition for positions. Thus, two weeks before commencement day I held a competitive examination based on questions from previous College Bowl games and on the basis of the results of this examination, which was taken by about twenty students, I invited eight to return to Dickinson on September 11, one week before our appearance date, to compete for the final four positions.

Then, "For thirty points, can you tell me . . .?"

"Dickinson! Williams!" The Dickinson captain frequently signalled his knowledge of the answer even before the question was completely developed; a tactic which demoralized the opposition.

Dave Richman was lightning fast with the buzzer here on a question designed deliberately to trip up those who anticipated. But in spite of the fact that at the time Richman interrupted the question there were at least four possible answers, he responded correctly, with the resulting reaction of relief as illustrated and the smile of approval of his teammate.

I suggested to the eight finalists (and here I should introduce them by name, as they comprise our present team: George Williams, Chappaqua, N.Y.; Norman Rothman, West Pittston, Pa.; David Richman, Phila., Pa.; Arthur Litoff, Carlisle, Pa.; Donald Richmond, Greenvale, L.I.; Elizabeth Wagner, Nanuet, N.Y.; Reginald K. Templeton, Mt. Lebanon, Pa.; and Mark Dischell, Margate, N.J.) that they devote some time during the summer to filling in the known gaps in their knowledge. I was aware, however, that it was unrealistic to expect the students to expend their full energy on preparing for something as uncertain as the College Bowl team. First, there was no guarantee that they would be among the first four. Second, many had summer jobs and simply had neither the time nor the inclination to pour through textbooks, outlines, or reference works. Some were enrolled in summer courses and others were preparing honors projects for the coming year. Consequently, I counted heavily on motivation; for if the students really wanted to make the team, if they had desire, then the handicaps caused by the lack of time and contact would be more than offset.

On reflection, I suppose we all feel that we have been like Alice in the country of the Red Queen; it has taken all the running we can do to stay in the same place. The treadmill started rolling on September 11, and in many respects it hasn't stopped yet. In one week I had to gain the students' confidence, get to know them myself, choose four out of eight with little to choose between them, so equal were they in ability and find enough time to practice on the bell and buzzer system Vince borrowed from Lycoming College. But there was one bright spot in what appeared to be a landscape of gloom. I had as my assistant Professor Harold Gillespie, who gave to us not only his time and his perceptive, intelligent judgment, but, more importantly, he gave his friendship and moral support. Whatever success we've had is in large measure a result of his unselfish efforts.

WE DECIDED that the fairest and most accurate way to pick a starting team was by having the students compete individually in a simulated game, with point totals kept for each student, so that the four with the highest number of points would then be our first team. There were, of course, obvious flaws in this method, the most salient being that one test, however comprehensive and controlled, is no criterion of ability. But we had to take our chances, since we had little time for experimentation; and yet, as it turned out, we had to rely on the most unscientific of methods in making our final decisions—intuition!

Norm Rothman completes a five-part history answer—his specialty. But the hallmark of the Dickinson team members was an unbelievable amount of knowledge outside their majors. And isn't that what a good liberal arts education is all about?

WE PRACTICED long and hard the week before the St. Francis game, on September 19th and never did one of the team members complain. The second team tried every bit as hard as the first team; indeed, this proved to be a problem, for on more than one occasion, the second team outscored the first, so that, to borrow a line from Alexander Pope, we were "in doubt to act, or rest." The practice sessions were essentially like the actual games; the questions were like those used on the program, and we tried, through the use of a time clock, to match the tempo of the show. Throughout the week we were consistently amazed by the amount of information the students had at their command. And by the end of our last practice on the Thursday before the first game, we had no doubt that, if the boys could work together after competing against one another so arduously, we would hold our own against any opponent. Happily, the last five weeks have proven that this estimate was far too conservative.

Taking the best wishes of the college with us, we boarded the train for New York at 2:45 on Friday, Sept. 17. The trip was for the most part a period of relaxation; and after the work and pressure of the practice week, it seemed almost anti-climactic. But an undercurrent of tension was evident, not only because we were aware that St. Francis had won two previous games, but also because I had not announced the starting team. We leave the hardest things to the last!

After checking into the Warwick Hotel, we assembled in my room, where I distributed the expense money and named the first team—Williams, captain; Rothman, Richman, and Litoff. It was over. All that remained was to win on Sunday. Each of us spent Saturday in his own way, shopping, visiting museums and art galleries, seeing friends and relatives. Then we all met Saturday evening to see a fine performance of The Glass Menagerie. It was here that we felt the team start to come together, and we sensed that the artificial differences of heterogeneous backgrounds and disparate campus social affiliations were beginning to fade, leaving only the solidarity of a commitment to a common goal.

Some of the questions went unanswered . . .

"I'm a nutcracker,
Mr. Earle."

Dickinson's Rothman, Williams, Smoller, Richman and Litoff receive the G.E. College Bowl trophy, emblematic of an undefeated championship, from moderator Robert Earle. In five victories the team compiled 1,350 points to opponents' 715 and netted the College $10,500 in scholarship grants. Dickinson became the first five-time winner in 1965 and the nineteenth since Bowl competition began in 1952. Ours was the 265th team to participate.

We all looked ashen-faced Sunday morning, but I was clearly the most nervous among us. The schedule called for us to be at the NBC studio at 9:30 A.M., to begin briefing and rehearsals. Upon arrival we were taken to a conference room where we met the St. Francis team and the moderator, Robert Earle. He explained the rules of the game and, to prepare us for the studio, conducted an informal practice without buzzers and bells. At eleven o'clock we began the series of three rehearsal games which precede the show. In our five appearances, we played a total of twenty games, of which we won nineteen, losing only the second practice game to St. Francis.

In effect, the results of the five programs followed the pattern set in practice; for before even going on the air, we not only established that we were the better team, but we also gained a decisive psychological advantage. And yet, in spite of our seeming superiority, I was in a state of constant anxiety during each show because, almost without exception, our opponents had the ability to defeat us. For me at least, not one of our victories came easy. The scores do not accurately reflect the difficulty of the effort.

The train ride back to Carlisle was joyful. Despite our fatigue, we continued to ask each other questions; whatever came into consciousness, however trivial, had to be somehow transformed into a question. In a sense, we had been absorbed by the "Game," had given part of ourselves to it and, indeed, to each other. In retrospect, I don't believe that we realized on that Sunday evening that the pressure, tension, weariness and joy of the past weekend would be repeated four more times. But, though the tree was high, and the climb hard, the fruit was sweet and satisfying.

IN CLOSING, I would like to say that no praise could approximate what the members of the Dickinson College Bowl Team deserve, and I speak here of the second team as well as the first. Their achievement testifies to their quality. Nor can I adequately express my gratitude to the faculty and the administration for their interest, suggestions, and encouragement. And I would like to thank all those whom I have not seen but who have faithfully seen me and the team for five Sundays: your enthusiasm and support were deeply appreciated. Above all, I would like to thank my wife for tolerating a husband who was frequently out three or four nights a week and who was away five weekends out of six. Thank you, dear, for letting me go!

Finally, the victories, the complimentary publicity, the money, the adulation—these are important tangible benefits derived from Dickinson's participation in the College Bowl. But more significant is the fact that students who may have never spoken to each other on campus or off—and who may never again—came together as human beings to share for a moment a great experience.

LINCOLN

and the POETS

Dr. William W. Betts, Jr., '49

Betts, William W. Lincoln and the Poets. Indiana, Pennsylvania: University of Pittsburgh Press, 1965, 140 pp. Reviewed by Dr. William Sloane, Professor of English.

Of the many articles I want to write when I get time—this probably means when I retire from teaching—one will be for the Dickinson Alumnus, and it will be entitled “The English Department Proudly Presents—”

The roster of English majors who have graduated since 1947, the end of my first year at Dickinson, is long; and year by year the roster grows increasingly distinguished, as now one graduate and now another adds to the good repute of Alma Mater.

If I named one name, I should have to name them all and thus embark on the article I am saving for my retirement. So today, (April 16) on the Good Friday one hundred years after the Good Friday when Lincoln was murdered, I limit myself to expressing Alma Mater's pride in Bill Betts and his new and fascinating anthology with running commentary, Lincoln and the Poets, published yesterday (April 15) by the University of Pittsburgh Press.

Properly, of course, I must now call him Dr. William W. Betts, Jr., Professor of English at Indiana State College, a fine teacher and a productive scholar who has co-edited Anglo-German and American-German Crosscurrents (University of North Carolina Press) and has published articles on Herman Melville, William Dean Howells, and George Meredith—and who, I must remember to say (if I don't, Vince Schafmeister will), was a member of the great class of 1949.

I have been picking up my review copy of Lincoln and the Poets every time

I've had a chance for several weeks. You will, too, when you get your copy, as you must. It's only $2.50 and it's light enough to carry in a female's handbag, being only 140 pages long, and it's very likely to keep you reading past your bus stop. And it would make a wonderful browsing book for your guest bedroom, or a perfect graduation present or birthday present or just a surprise present for someone.

In the course of browsing, I have enjoyed forty American poems of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries—most of them new to me, many of them great—inspired by the figure of Abraham Lincoln, who himself loved poetry. They are the work of twenty-three poets, on each of whom Dr. Betts has provided a soundly researched and humanly interesting essay discussing his relationship to Lincoln. Lincoln and the Poets is therefore at once an anthology of the most memorable American poetry about the sixteenth President of the United States and a commentary on the growth of Lincoln as a poetic symbol. Let Dr. Betts sum it up in his Afterword better than I could:

One hundred years following the black Good Friday the poets continue to draw upon the symbolic value of Lincoln. Some testify to his greatness as a man, or as a President, associating him with Christ in his martyrdom; some look upon him as the figure in whom are most impressively and most completely exhibited the American ideals; some regard him as a supremely tragic human being, a Hamlet-type, caught up, as Delmore Schwartz puts it, “on History's ceaseless insane sums.” For all of us, however, and the poets have recognized it best, the historical figure of Abraham Lincoln better than that of any other hero fills the need of a people to define in one name the promise of America.

P.S. I quit at that point on Good Friday to leave space for a report on any review I found in the weekend newspapers. Sure enough, the book was splendidly reviewed in my Easter Sunday issue of the New York Herald Tribune, and probably in your Sunday paper, too. We proudly present Dr. Bill Betts and Lincoln and the Poets.

Dr. Betts has been a Professor of English and Assistant basketball coach at Indiana State College since 1955, the year after he received his Ph.D. at Pennsylvania State University. He received his M.A. at the University of Minnesota in 1950. He has also published George Meredith: The Saxon in the Celt, The Relations of William Dean Howells to German Life and Letters, and Moby Dick: Melville's Faust. Dr. Betts is married to the former Jane Jackson, '49, and has two sons, Michael, aged 10, and Thomas, 4. He was an SAE at Dickinson.

IT WAS the kind of day an alumni secretary would like to live forever!

Our football team rollicked past Haverford, 33-8; A Founders Day program—not just a few innovations sought and earned precedent—clearly illustrated that Dickinson had indeed been about the business of educating persons who have the capacity for leadership in the larger society and the will to serve their fellow men; the barbecued chicken at the Alumni Luncheon bore no resemblance whatsoever to the marinated hockey puck of Homecomings past; and ten All-American girls were properly saluted by an appreciative crowd at the half-time ceremonies when a Homecoming Queen was crowned.

But it didn't start out as the kind of day an alumni secretary would like to live forever!

First, there was the weather forecast of the night before that insisted the temperature would rise no higher than the middle sixties and that showers were a certainty. Then the weatherman held fast to his prediction Saturday morning at 7 A.M. literally defying us to go ahead with our plans for an out-of-doors Homecoming. Bearing in mind his remarkable consistency for obscuring the real intent of Carlisle weather, we committed ourselves to the outside and were blessed with a partly sunny day; truly in the middle sixties but rain-free and the entire fiesta occurred as diagrammed.

And all agreed, only the majesty of Old West could have served as a fitting backdrop for the day's formal affairs.

The Founders Day celebration, normally a spring-of-the-year event, was planned instead for Homecoming, so that alumni might share in this tribute to our founding fathers. Reflecting the spirit that motivated the founders of this fine old school and that has marked the lives of so many Dickinsonians, the theme of this year's observance was Public Service.

A Convocation began with an Academic Procession in full regalia and terminated at a speakers platform in front of Old West. Under a gaily-striped canopy in Dickinson colors two alumni were acclaimed for their gift of responsible and respected talents to the nation and to humanity.

Dr. C. Law McCabe, '43, Vice-President in charge of Research and Dean of Graduate Studies at the Carnegie Institute of Technology and also recently named Deputy Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Science and Technology, was awarded the Dickinson College Citation for Distinguished Public Service. He was presented to President Rubendall, '31, by Dr. Horace E. Rogers, '24, of the faculty.

A similar citation was also awarded to Dr. Perry Franklin Prather, '16, in recognition both of his contribution in the field of preventive medicine and of his service with distinction as Commissioner of Health for the State of Maryland. He was presented to President Rubendall by Dr. Elmer C. Herber, of the faculty.

The Hon. William Warren Scranton, Governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, was presented for the Convocation address by Samuel W. Witwer, Esq., '30 President of the Board of Trustees, after which he received the Honorary Degree of Doctor of Laws—presented at this time by Dr. Samuel H. Magill, Dean of the College.

Governor Scranton acknowledged in the most affectionate terms that the nearly 200 year history of this institution is filled with the names of men who have dedicated themselves to public life. "The founder and namesake, John Dickinson, stirred a budding young nation with his famed 'Letters' and other similar political expositions. Two Dickinsonians signed the Declaration of Independence. Three of your alumni have served as Governors of this Commonwealth while one, James Buchanan, became President of the United States." Scranton noted that these men were not only public servants but politicians as well.

"It is No Longer Enough to Indulge in Blind Criticism"

The Governor then came quickly to his point—a defense of the politician. ". . . that workhorse of American democracy who is maligned, misunderstood, shouted at, deprived frequently of even the most fundamental extension of common courtesy, and sometimes thrown out of office in the prime of a full-blooming career because he can't manage to please all of the people all of the time."

"Mothers," the Governor insisted, "still want their favorite sons to grow up to be president, they don't want them to grow up to be politicians." A responsive audience of about 1,400 persons appreciated the fact that for even a great president the first great act must be to get elected!

Gubernatorial Highlights

"We forget that politics is no idle and wasteful trapping of our system of government, but the very juice that keeps the system alive and vital.

"The over-all portrait of American politics is one of extraordinary success and competence.

"My purpose is not to suggest that we should completely rewrite the rules of the game and make our politicians safe from criticism. My point is simply that in a society which annually becomes more complicated it is no longer enough to indulge in blind criticism.

"The challenge of executive political leadership is to provide a broad philosophical base for his program and then help make it possible for sufficient numbers of his fellow politicians to support it.

"American politics today cries out for our best talents, for a constant infusion of our best young minds and hearts. We need young people to become politicians and our society ought to encourage them to do so."

Governor Scranton suggested two ways to elevate professional politics from the level of a necessary evil:

1. By stripping away the unfavorable stereotyped image which has been superimposed over politicians as they really are.

And,

2. By saying to more and more of our young men and women "become a politician, give your best in that honorable calling with other good people and who knows what wonders you will work for your nation, your state, your community."

Concluding his address with the observation that Dickinson was indeed older than the Republic itself and that our College had long preserved the legacy of freedom passed on from earlier generations, the Governor declared, "Those who would enjoy the blessings of freedom must undergo the fatigue of supporting it. The task is not an easy one—political life is, in fact, hard. But the opportunity for service is great and good leadership is a vital necessity. Make your contribution—it's needed."

President Rubendall presided over the Founders Day Convocation, which likely will become a permanent part of annual Homecoming celebrations. It is good that we innovate in behalf of the beloved persons who founded Dickinson in 1773. In this respect, we reprint herewith from the program a charming qualification of Founders Day composed by one of the College's most illustrious scholars, Dr. Charles C. Sellers, Librarian:

“THERE is, as one views it down the long corridor of the years, an abiding charm in the spectacle of our ‘Founders Day.’ We see the College of long ago in sedate procession through the town, the boys of Belles Lettres each with his red rose, and the boys of Union Philosophical with the white, marching with their professors to the Old Graveyard, to lay their wreaths on ‘Great Nisbet’s’ tomb—with the poems, orations, prayers, of rededication. Without the perspective of time, institutional piety rarely has this appealing character. It is a happy circumstance that on our campus the custom has continued unbroken and that, even more, the observance has been modified in form, keeping pace with modernity and never wearing the aspect of a custom maintained for custom’s sake alone.

“IT is pleasant and not unreasonable to suppose that ‘Founders Day’ became so early and so strongly fixed in the life of this campus by our founders’ own sense of vigorous dedication. They did not act to perpetuate a doctrine or follow a philanthropic pattern. They transformed the little frontier grammar school into a college to meet a national crisis. Independence had just been won after seven years of war. Only by an informed and responsible citizenry could all the vast problems of democratic government and social order be met. Information, prudently distilled, came to the young men in their classes, while constantly in the two Society halls they debated every theme of public interest in preparation for lives of active service in their chosen paths. With some of its first freshness and urgency, the founding impetus has been kept alive in a changing scene. Some of the spirit of Rush and the others stays with us—that sense of a compelling, inescapable duty to our country and our world.”

All the cats were there.

THE College will continue the traditional ceremonies at Nisbet's tomb here in Carlisle, but will schedule them instead for the 21st of January yearly. Nisbet was born on January 21, 1736.

The Dickinson Band, directed by Professor Dennis Kudlawiec, provided an entertaining bridge between the formal Convocation and the informal Alumni Luncheon that followed immediately. This same fine aggregate accompanied both the Processional and Recessional with such regal sounding music that some Alumni were heard to observe, “it sounded like one of Zanuck's introductions to a Caesar entrance.” The supreme compliment, we thought! How fortunate we are to have a music department capable of producing sounds of such professional dimensions! And how appreciative the Alumni to find that students possessed such musical abilities and in spite of increased academic pressures, found time to see that their College was represented by a band!

THE luncheon featured barbecued chicken, as noted earlier, prepared under the direction of the new Dickinson Food Service, Mike Cipolla, Director. With all due respect to previous luncheons, this one must rank as the best—if Alumni opinion influences final judgement. A bit of editorializing here: Likely the excellence and diversity of the food was the major factor, because it was unparalleled in this alumni secretary's memory. But certainly additional recognition must go to Mr. Cipolla personally, because of his feel for this sort of thing. This is a touch we have needed. Students echo this observation!

Our football team kept Alumni on their feet with five touchdowns and assorted extra points as the result of a top notch brand of play. Wilbur J. (Wib) Gobrecht, '52, one of Dickinson's all-time gridiron greats, is the new coach of the Red Devils and is having a splendid year. Dickinson has defeated Muhlenberg, 20-8; Haverford, as noted; F. & M., 35-7 and rugged P.M.C., 14-7. Their lone loss was to Swarthmore, 12-16. Dickinson, as a result is perched in second place in the Middle Atlantic Conference with a 4 and 1 mark. Swarthmore is in the lead at 3 and 0. The standings follow:

There are three games remaining on the schedule as we go to press with The Dickinson Alumnus, October 27th; Lebanon Valley, Western Maryland, and Johns Hopkins.

Number 81 is the receiving end (no pun intended) of Dickinson's potent passing combination. Quarterback Dennis Wachter of Hagerstown, Md. fires them and Bob Averback of Philadelphia, an end, hauls them in. Averback escaped from a near-impossible situation at midfield in this photograph as he avoided a Haverford defender whooshing in from the rear and shook loose from another "Ford" in front. Averback picked up a block from number 85, John Bierly, and went the rest of the way for Dickinson's second touchdown. This was Averback's seventh touchdown pass of the season, breaking the old mark of six set by Coach Gobrecht. He leads the MAC in scoring and has caught 26 passes for 414 yards in five games. Bob is a senior.

Carol Baker Queen; SAE's Win President's Cup

At the half Dickinson's ten fraternities launched a cavalcade of ten convertibles each carrying a nominee for Homecoming Queen. Alumni Secretary, Vince Schafmeister, '49, served as master of ceremonies, assisted by President Rubendall and IFC representative, Jim Aaron. Carol Baker, Kappa Sigma's nominee was named and was presented a bouquet of red and white carnations by Dr. Rubendall, who also exercised the presidential privilege of a kiss on the cheek.

Another traditional occurrence at Homecoming is the presentation of the President's Cup. This trophy is awarded by the President of the College to that fraternity scoring highest in four criteria: Scholarship, Extra-curricular participation, campus citizenship, and Community Service. The winner, for the fourth consecutive year, was SAE.

The Dickinson band, again, complemented the half-time program.

One would think that the transition from the gaiety of a football game to the solemnity of a memorial service would be too difficult to negotiate scheduled one behind the other. Yet this was not the case as Alumni nearly filled Allison Church immediately after the contest, in order to pay their last respects to Dr. Gilbert "Red" Malcolm who passed away on July 2, 1965.

LIKELY, Dr. W. Lynn Crowding, '25, Associate Pastor of Allison Church, reflected Alumni thinking in his memorial prayer which said in part, "We do not mourn his (Dr. Malcolm) going with a dirge; we give him a hail and a cheer.

"We give back to nature only that which is natural; to the grave only that which the grave can hold.

"To Thee, Father of us all, we give back a glowing, living, pulsating spirit—a spirit so in love with life that we can but think of him rejoicing in that larger, fuller life of the great beyond.

"We say, 'we'll meet you in the morning,' we who sign our prayer of thanksgiving in - kai -."

President Rubendall began the service with the invocation. The Old Testament Reading, the 90th Psalm, was given by David M. Wallace, Esq., '15, a classmate of "Red's." Sherwood Bonney, Esq., '31, gave the New Testament Reading, the 13th Chapter of First Corinthians. Bonney, like Wallace, is a member of the Board of Trustees of the College and, in addition, is a past president of national Beta Theta Pi, the fraternity to which "Red" belonged.

Dr. Rogers, '24, gave the Eulogy for the faculty. "First we knew him,"

The Length and Variety of His Services Believed to be Unique in History of Higher Education

Dr. Rogers claimed, "As Mr. Malcolm, then Gilbert Malcolm, then very shortly as 'Red' Malcolm. Following this it was Editor (The Alumnus), Secretary, Treasurer, Director, Doctor, Vice-President, President, Provost, President Emeritus and now, to all, Mr. Dickinson. As has been stated many times, the length and variety of the services of this man of seemingly infinite energy, culminating in the Presidency of the College, is believed to be unique in the history of higher education."

DR. ROGERS concluded, "We will not forget Mr. Dickinson. His spirit will live on in our hearts and the hearts of thousands of Dickinsonians. May I close with a verse of the College Hymn which our friend loved to sing and with enthusiasm. We praise thee for our College halls, for Dickinson's gray ivy walls, and pray thee Lord that all the days, we tread with joy these happy ways, be filled with service high to Thee, accepted may our offering be. We of the faculty will miss Dr. Gilbert Malcolm and we will not forget him."

Dr. Prather, '16, gave the Eulogy for the Alumni. A classmate and fraternity brother of "Red," Dr. Prather recalled their student days when Dr. Malcolm was the only one in the house, and one of the very few in the College, who could afford an automobile. "With his means and abilities," Dr. Prather insisted, "'Red' could have amassed a fortune, but rather he chose to devote his life to public service."

DR. PRATHER added, "He (Dr. Malcolm) measured up to Albert Einstein's definition given in an interview published in Life Magazine on May 2, 1955: "Try not to become a man of success but rather try to become a man of value. He is considered successful in our day who gets more out of life than he puts in, but a man of value will give more than he receives."

Among "Red's" favorite hymns were A Mighty Fortress is our God and How Firm a Foundation. These were sung and the Benediction given by President Rubendall. On the memorial program was this final tribute: No person has served Dickinson more faithfully, more assiduously. No wonder grateful alumni have honored him for loyal, devoted and exemplary service and have placed him in that high niche reserved for greatest leaders.

Announcing The Gilbert Malcolm Fellows

Whereas Dr. Gilbert "Red" Malcolm returned to his Alma Mater to strengthen her financial resources, and whereas "Red" Malcolm founded Annual Giving at Dickinson in 1934; it is fitting and is thus resolved that his name be perpetually honored with the chartering of Dickinson College's century club, the Gilbert Malcolm Fellows. Recognizing those who can do the most toward achieving the increasingly higher goals of the Dickinson Fund with annual gifts of $100.00 or more, the Fellowship is designed to strengthen the College in a unique way. The Dickinson Fund Committee urges you to participate in the life of the College as a Gilbert Malcolm Fellow.

Serving as ushers and as an honor guard for Mrs. Malcolm were the following members of Beta Theta Pi Fraternity: James N. Snyder, '66; Larry Pearson, '67; Edward C. Fallon, III, '67; Charles N. Smith, '67; Hubert A. Nelson, '68; Steven Reynolds, '68; Jeffrey Blank, '68; Robert A. Shive, '68; Michael Walker, '68; Jerome Carpenter, '68 and Peter J. Schweiger, '68. Robert Bailey, '68, was the organist.

The evening program began with a cider and donut hour in the fraternity residences, moved into dinners for both fraternity and non-fraternity groups, and terminated with a band concert in the College Union and tours of the Planetarium and Observatory.

One traditional highlight of Homecoming failed to share in the festivities—the presentation by the President of the Alumni Association of the cup awarded the fraternity constructing the best display. This year the display consisted of just one project and was a cooperative venture engaged in by all the houses. It was a massive guillotine that, at advertised times, divided a dummy pictured as the administration. The display was designed to reflect student disenchantment with a tightening of the social rules as they applied to both drinking on campus and women above the first floor in fraternities and male dormitories.

FINALLY, a bit of good news for those Alumni who have shown their pride and affection for our College through their gifts to the Dickinson Fund (formerly Annual Giving). At the Friday night (October 8, 1965) meeting of the Alumni Council, it was resolved to hold fast to the present requirements for Life Memberships in the General Alumni Association, but an amendment was accepted that would permit all those Alumni who gave to the Dickinson Fund the previous year, the privilege of voting for members of the Alumni Council. This is a significant step forward in franchising those who rightfully call themselves Dickinsonians!

Alumni Council Homecoming Meeting

President Howell C. Mette, '48, called the Homecoming meeting of the Alumni Council to order at 8:15 p.m. in the College Union.

Council members present were: Mary Lou Breen, '40; Kathryn Brougher, '27; Catherine Eitmiller, '46; Mary Eshelman, '43; George C. Herring III, '53; G. Harold Keatley, '27; Samuel J. McCartney, Jr., '41; James M. McElfish, '43; Howard Maxwell, '48; Ralph L. Minker, Jr., '47; Helen Dickey Morris, '33; Andrew Y. Rogers, '65; Virginia Watts, '24 and Thomas V. Zug, '33. Also present were Robert Grant Crist, '47, past president of the GAA; William B. Harlan, '50 of the Publications Committee and Robert E. Young, '59, of the Continuing Education Committee.

The minutes of the Commencement meeting June 4, 1965 were read, corrected and approved.

Vince Schafmeister, '49, Alumni Secretary, reported on the current (and recurring) student discontent in connection with the social rules of the College. He indicated that we would not be able to award the Alumni Cup for best fraternity display since this year's effort was a cooperative one between the ten houses. He indicated that a sort of armed truce exists this weekend for Homecoming festivities, and that arbitration committees are continuing to meet regularly. Peace, it is hoped, will come later this fall.

COMMITTEE REPORTS

Continuing Education

A report from Sid Kline, '54, on Continuing Education urged a continuation of our Alumni College. Questions on dates and policies were presented and opinions asked of Council. The Committee will announce shortly after the Christmas holidays its judgment on next year's "College."

Alumni Clubs

All Alumni Clubs, Vince reported, are showing gratifying increases in attendance and interest. Nearly all clubs have now established Student Selection Committees. It is hoped that these will be performing valuable service soon in connection with admissions of new students to Dickinson. The president noted here that, with regret, he was accepting the resignation of Council member, Margaret Burtner, '41, because she will soon be moving to Japan with her Air Force Colonel husband.

Publications

Sam McCartney, chairman of the Publications Committee, in a brief report, praised the ALUMNUS and said that he had heard highly favorable reaction to the new form and content of our magazine. Vince was congratulated on an outstanding job.

Annual Giving

Evan C. Frey, '59, Director of Annual Giving, reports a successful campaign last year and announced a goal of $220,000 this year as opposed to $200,000 last year. He urged Council members to support Annual Giving in every way possible.

Dr. George Shuman, Financial Vice-President of Dickinson, outlined the present and future building expansion and renovation plans. He reported that in the future the Trustees will meet regularly three times a year. He announced that there will be a stronger summer school, indicating emphasis on acceleration rather than make-up work. In addition, there are numerous institutes and conferences scheduled for the campus this summer. "The Redskins, too, make considerable financial contribution to the college finances," said Dr. Shuman. The new field house on Biddle Field, for example, was made possible by the Redskins' use of our facilities. He reported continued efforts in The Six Million For Dickinson campaign.

Life Membership

Helen Morris, chairman of the Life Membership committee, submitted the following recommendation of her committee: There shall be no change in the present requirement of $50.00 or four installments of $12.50 for Life Membership in the General Alumni Association. It was moved, seconded and passed that this recommendation be accepted. James McElfish moved that the Council express thanks to Mrs. Morris for the long-continued work of her committee on Constitutional Revision in connection with broadening the base of franchise in the Association. Motion was seconded and passed.

Program, Policy, Practice

George Lindsay, '48 appointed chairman of the Program, Policy and Practices Committee last year, was not present and did not send any report. This committee had been instructed to submit to the Council proposals for a program for the Dickinson Alumni Association, derived from a study of alumni associations in other college and universities. President Mette announced that consideration of this subject will not be dropped, but every effort will be made to present these important matters to the Council at the next meeting.

Alumni Activities

George Hering, chairman of the Alumni Activities committee, solicited suggestions for future activities and asked that Council members pass on to him any ideas on the subject.

GENERAL DISCUSSION

Ralph Minker raised the question of a mid-winter meeting of the Council. He suggested that perhaps Dr. Rubendall could be free to meet with us then. Further discussion resulted in a suggestion of a working session—perhaps conferences with several members of the administration. Howard Maxwell expressed the hope that the P.P.P. committee would produce ideas for a closer liaison with the college administration. Discussion closed with the motion that the decision on a mid-winter meeting be made by the executive committee. Motion passed.

Tom Zug raised the question of admission of children of alumni to the college. He wondered if perhaps more attention could be given to personal explanation when it is found necessary to refuse admission to a child of an alumnus. General discussion brought out the suggestion that the Dean of Admissions could be invited to talk with the council on this matter, particularly, at a council meeting in the near future. It was further suggested that perhaps the Student Selection Committees of the alumni clubs might be of service in this area. With no further business to come before the council, the meeting was adjourned at 10:15 P.M.

Respectfully submitted
Kathryn Coulter Brougher
Secretary

Letters To (And From) The Editor

To the Editor:

On behalf of The Dickinsonian Endowment Fund I would like to compliment you on your excellent coverage of the plight of the Humanities in the August Issue of the Alumnus. It is encouraging to know that this problem has been given consideration on a national level and that action is being taken with the passage of the Humanities Bill.

It is with some pride, however, that we note this problem was recognized at Dickinson two years ago, and a solution realized in the form of The Dickinsonian Endowment Fund. Established by Margaret Kingman Wallace ('65) and the Editorial Board of the Dickinsonian, the fund has grown to $2,500 in two years, and through student and alumni contributions it is sure to continue growing into a workable amount.

We cannot help feeling that we are aiding Dickinson in fulfilling its role, in Dr. Allan's excellent words, "... to raise up men and women who are convinced that they must accept responsibility for the world that has formed them and for the actions with which they in turn transform their world."

Sincerely,

Eleanor F. Weinel, '66
Alumni Chairman
The Dickinsonian Endowment Fund

(President Johnson signed the Arts and Humanities bill on September 29,

1965. As enacted the bill is Public Law 89-209. When he put his name to the act at the signing ceremony he offered these presidential remarks:

"In the long history of man, countless empires and nations have come and gone. Those which created no lasting works of art are reduced today to short footnotes in history's catalog.

"Art is a nation's most precious heritage. For it is in our works of art that we reveal to ourselves, and others, the inner vision which guides us as a nation. And where there is no vision, the people perish.

"We in America have not always been kind to the artists and scholars who are the creators and the keepers of our vision. Somehow, the scientists always seem to get the penthouse, while the arts and humanities get the basement.

"Last year, for the first time in our history, we passed legislation to start changing that situation. We created the National Council on the Arts.

"The talented and distinguished members of that Council have worked very hard. They have worked creatively. They have dreamed dreams and they have developed ideas.

"This new bill, creating the National Foundation for the Arts and the Humanities, gives us the power to turn some of those dreams and ideas into reality."

After crediting the numerous sponsors of the bill and making appropriate remarks to those sharing the platform during the ceremony, the president related what the Council, in cooperation with state and local governments, planned to do with this act.

"We will," President Johnson insisted, "commission new works of music by American composers.

"We will create a National Theatre to bring ancient and modern classics of the theatre to audiences all over America.

"We will support a National Opera Company and a National Ballet Company.

"We will create an American Film Institute, bringing together leading artists of the film industry, outstanding educators, and young men and women who wish to pursue the 20th century art form as their life's work.

"We will support our symphony orchestras.

"We will bring more great artists to our schools and universities by creating grants for their time in residence.

"But those are only a small part of the programs that we are ready to begin.

They will have an unprecedented effect on the arts and the humanities of our great nation.

"But these actions, and others soon to follow, cannot alone achieve our goals. To produce true and lasting results, our states and our municipalities, our schools and our great private foundations, must join forces with us.

"It is in the neighborhoods of each community that a nation's art is born. In countless American towns there live thousands of obscure and unknown talents.

"What this bill really does is to bring active support to this great national asset, to make fresher the winds of art in this great land of ours.

"The arts and the humanities belong to the people, for it is, after all, the people who create them." ED.)

To the Editor:

In recent years, two cultural histories of American educational institutions have been published. Both Schmidt's The Liberal Arts Colleges, and Rudolph's The American College and University discuss at length the unique significance of the earliest presidents of American colleges to their development; both evince the important role of Dickinson College's first President, Dr. Charles Nisbet.

It was, therefore, with interest and delight that I read Dr. Milton Flower's thoughtful and deft study of Dr. Nisbet in the August Alumnus. Author Flower has effectively located the essence of Nisbet the man and President of Dickinson: adherence to rigorous intellectual standards, intense concern with the kind of world in which he existed, and finally, close attention to the personal development of the individuals under his guidance. As the College moves towards its third century, Dr. Flower's article not only confirms what Dr. Spahr has written in his Spahr Lecture on Nisbet—that the College owes to Rush, Dickinson and Nisbet what it is—but also reveals that the College's first President created the foundations for what Dickinson College ought to be.

Walter E. Beach '56

To the Editor:

I have just finished reading the biography of Charles Nisbet in the August number of The Dickinson Alum- nus. It is a splendid piece of work—sympathetic, realistic, informative, and colorful. Much labor must have gone into the doing of it. Keep up the good work! Cordially,

Robert T. Patterson, '31

To the Editor:

We enjoyed Milton's article on Nisbet. Thought it was very well written; format excellent . . . all in all it was one of the best Dickinson Alumnus magazines I've seen.

Dear Vince:

Do excuse me for not being able to reply to your letter of June 25 sooner—but I have been really tied up in work, and it is only the last few days or so that I have had the time to catch up on correspondence.

I am most grateful to you for your congratulations. I find my work quite interesting, but I like it better because it allows me to put into practice what I learned at Dickinson, Switzerland, Germany and Cambridge. The sort of liberal arts education provided by Dickinson is especially valuable because of the emphasis on "roundedness" and upon creative thinking. The exclusive academic emphasis of other places is not enough in my kind of work, where one meets so many different types, and where every problem is a different one.

I handle foreign and economic affairs generally, although not exclusively. I had the opportunity of accompanying His Royal Highness the Crown Prince some months back on a delegation to the Tenth Anniversary of the First Afro-Asian Conference in Indonesia. The three-week trip took in Bangkok, Thailand, Rangoon, Burma, and some cities in India. As this was my first trip east, east of Calcutta, it was an eye-opener. The peoples of Asia are so different: within the same country there are the most glaring contrasts.

As an underdeveloped country, economic development is of life-and-death importance to us, who are natives of the country. I have had the opportunity to complement the academic tools provided by Dickinson by observing, analysing, and participating in the nation's economic life. A lot of projects have sprouted up, and the challenge lies in giving development direction and speed.

The Dickinson Alumnus is a thrill to receive. Would you direct it to Nepal from now on instead of sending it on to Cambridge? Please convey my warmest wishes to all at Dickinson.

Cordially,

Chiran S. Thapa '62

Dr. Herbert Richards, '41, "Clergyman of the Year"

The Rev. Dr. Herbert E. Richards, '41, Minister of Boise, Idaho's First Methodist Church (The Cathedral of the Rockies) for 14 years, has been named "Clergyman of the Year" by Religious Heritage of America, Inc., a nonsectarian organization. Among previous recipients are evangelist Billy Graham and the 1964 award winner, Dr. Norman Vincent Peale.

The scarlet-and-gold parchment scroll presented to Dr. Richards called him a "Christian statesman" and added in handwritten, enameled letters:

"It is the judgment of Religious Heritage that with his pulpit—which is the Cathedral of the Rockies—his radio programs, his capital Foundation of Inspiration, his interfaith, and civic activities, Dr. Richards has well-earned the title of Mr. Idaho and the Clergyman of 1965 award."

The 45 year old former resident of Hazleton has served as an exchange minister to England and Japan; has served twice as Chaplain of the Idaho State Senate; has been active in the American Red Cross, Boy Scouts and the State Civil Air Patrol. And during his tenure in Boise, his church has taken in more than 3,000 members while increasing from one to twelve choirs. They include three handbell choirs, one of which has played concerts throughout the nation, including appearances at world's fairs in Seattle, Washington and New York City.

But likely his greatest achievement has been the construction of the Cathedral of the Rockies. The two million dollar, city block square complex, has been held up as an example of modern Gothic architecture. And Dr. Richards is recognized as the director of the drive that provided construction funds.

After Dickinson, Dr. Richards attended Drew University and Theological Seminary and Columbia University. He was a faculty member and assistant dean at Drew and taught also at Howard University in Washington, D.C. and at Columbia, before becoming pastor in Boise.

"The real test of service," Dr. Richards believes, "is the opportunity to inspire the mind and soul of the individual with a sense of God."

He accepted his election humbly, insisting the award should have gone to one more deserving.

Winfield A. Peterson, Jr., '43; Fred A. Lumb, '25; Dr. Howard L. Rubendall, '31; and Charles A. Ferrone, '57, comprised the speaking team at a recent dinner in Boston, where over 70 Dickinsonians turned out. Again, a record response. A fifth participant in the after dinner program, not shown, was William A. McCune, Jr., '37.

Boyd Lee Spahr, Esq., '00, recipient of the "Red" Malcolm Award last Commencement Weekend, received another expression of appreciation from grateful alumni October 10, 1965, when the Philadelphia Alumni Club acknowledged Dr. Spahr's philanthropy towards Dickinsonians pursuing graduate studies in the Philadelphia area. Robert M. Brasler, '58, vice-president of the Club made the presentation at Dr. Spahr's home with the assistance of Gus Bird, '64 (left) and Jerry Piserchia, '64, both of whom are attending Temple Medical School. The plaque reads as follows: "Presented to Boyd Lee Spahr in recognition of his many years of dedicated service to Dickinson College and in grateful appreciation for his thoughtful and generous assistance to Dickinson College Alumni pursuing graduate studies in the Philadelphia area."

Apologies and gratitude to the following whose names did not appear on the 1965 Dickinson Fund Honor Roll: William S. Bender, '30, Charlotte Chadwick Litchauer, '36, Henry G. Witman of our Admissions Staff, and Henry J. Young Associate Professor of History.

When ground was broken for the Carlisle Container Company the accompanying ceremony had all the earmarks of a Dickinson Alumni Club gathering. Left to right are David Rogers, '47, of Cumberland Builders, general contractors; George G. Douglas, Jr., Esq., '50, chairman of the Industrial Development Committee of the Carlisle Chamber of Commerce; Carrol J. Warrell, president of the Chamber; Mrs. E. K. Masland (Sarah Haddock, '51) vice-president of the company; Edward K. Masland, '54, president of the company; Carlisle Mayor, William M. Hartzell, '51; Robert M. Frey, '50, president of the Carlisle Borough Council; and Mark Garber, Jr., secretary-treasurer of the company.

A recent gift to the College by the Mary Dickinson Club in the amount of $2,000.00 furnished the Music Lounge (shown here) in the basement of the College Union and also supplied curtains for the Little Theatre. Appreciative Mermaid Players acknowledged in their last program: "The Mary Dickinson Club has again undertaken a project of assistance to the College, a project which our audiences will appreciate especially. Last Fall, when our theatre opened, this fine organization undertook to supply our need for a set of drapes to dress up the stage. (In theatre parlance: teasers, tormenters, legs and cyc.) Tonight's double-bill provides an obvious instance of our need and the use of these drapes. Similarly, last month The Follies and the Operetta Workshop both found their staging simplified by the generosity of the ladies of the Mary Dickinson Club. The Mermaid Players and our audience join the College Community in a grateful salute."

At the annual Commencement meeting of the Mary Dickinson Club, the Carlisle constituency presented an Honorary Membership in the Club in the name of Rhesea Madden Schecter, wife of Professor Emeritus Ralph E. Schecter; the eighth such honorary of $100.00 each. Mrs. Schecter was thus saluted for her superior services to the community, to the college, and to the Mary Dickinson organization, which she had served as chairman from 1959 through 1963. And the $100.00 joins the Mary Dickinson Endowment invested by the College and used for the Club's annual scholarship grant of $300.00 awarded each year to an outstanding woman student.

A Living Reflection of the Founding Fathers' Creed: Right to Hold Property

The Market Place for American Industry

By Robert M. Pizzini, '52
Member—New York Stock Exchange

THE New York Stock Exchange, founded on May 17, 1792, is a market place for securities.

It is a vast trading floor in a building at the corner of Broad and Wall Streets, New York City. It is the nation's largest organized securities market, where hundreds of Exchange member brokers daily buy and sell, for thousands of people, the stocks and bonds of most of America's leading corporations.

The Exchange operates in a rather unique fashion. It is not like the conventional auction where only buyers compete and there is one seller. On the Exchange there is a two-way auction market. Here is how it works: bidders compete with each other to purchase at the lowest possible price the shares they want to buy. Simultaneously, those seeking to sell compete with each other to get the highest price for the shares they are offering. When the buyer bidding the highest price and the seller offering at the lowest price agree on a figure which is acceptable to each, a transaction is made.

The Exchange is a market place where prices reflect the basic law of supply and demand. It is a market place where shares in American industry can be bought and sold almost as rapidly as you can deposit money in the bank.

By bringing buyers and sellers together in one open market the Exchange becomes a living reflection of the Founding Fathers' creed that we all have the right to hold property. It's natural that it should, for the New York Stock Exchange is just about as old as our country.

Perhaps the Stock Exchange's most important function is that it allows the individual to put his capital to work whenever he chooses. In a free society, capital must be free to move from one enterprise to another—entitled to the profits when the venture succeeds, ready to stand the losses if it fails.

The Stock Exchange and its members serve their country and themselves only as they continue to provide the facilities for that freedom of movement.

The Exchange provides the saver with a medium by which he may convert his funds into securities which he hopes will bring him income, a gain of capital, or both.

It is easy to see that if there were no national market place where people could voluntarily invest in their country's future, or sell their securities for cash, the financing of new industrial growth would be curtailed sharply. More important, the ability of millions of people to plan their long-range financial programs would be severely hampered.

Membership in the Exchange totals 1,366 individuals.

About half the members are partners or officers in member organizations doing business with the public. These members execute customers' orders to buy and sell on the Exchange and their firms receive the commissions on those transactions. Many firms have more than one member.

ABOUT one-fourth of all members of the Exchange are specialists—so-called because they specialize in "making a market" for one or more stocks.

To carry out this function of maintaining a fair and orderly market, insofar as reasonably possible, in the stocks which he specializes, the specialist must often risk his own capital by buying at a higher price or selling at a lower price than the public may be willing to pay or accept at that moment.

Some members are odd lot dealers. They serve investors who purchase or sell a few shares at a time, rather than in the conventional 100-share unit, known as a round lot. The odd lot member acts as a dealer, not as a broker. He buys odd lots of stocks from, or sells odd lots of stock to other members doing a public business. In most stocks an odd lot is any number of shares from 1 to 99.

THEN there are individual floor brokers, whose function is to assist the commission house brokers. Floor brokers are still popularly known as "$2 brokers." To the uninitiated the term "$2 broker" will need some explaining. Of the 1,366 members of the Exchange about 100 of them are independent brokers not affiliated with a brokerage firm. These members handle the execution of buy and sell orders when a firm's own broker has more orders than he can conveniently handle or when he is off the floor for some reason. Years ago the floor brokerage commission charge was $2 for each 100-share transaction. However, the name $2 broker applied to the independent floor brokers at that time has stuck through the years. Incidentally, the floor commission at the present time ranges from $1.25 to $5.00 per 100 shares depending on the price of the stock. The average floor brokerage commission is roughly $3.65.

All members—whatever their function—must of course own a "seat" on the Exchange, a term that traces back to early years when the brokers did remain seated while the president called the list of securities.

There is nothing sedentary about a Stock Exchange member's day now. One of the most interesting sights for the hundreds of thousands of visitors who annually watch the trading floor from the galleries is the constant movement of the people on the floor.

Trading was brisk

Robert M. Pizzini was graduated from The Peddie School in 1948—he is now a member of the Board of Corporators—and went directly to Dickinson. A member of the class of 1952, Bob was a member of Alpha Chi Rho Fraternity. After a tour of duty with The United States Navy, he went to work in Wall Street with his father's firm of B. W. Pizzini & Co., Inc.

For five years, Bob was indoctrinated in every phase of the securities business, concentrating on the workings of the margin and trading departments, as well as corporate underwritings. Prior to becoming a registered representative of The New York Stock Exchange, he took courses at The New York Institute of Finance. He later became the syndicate manager of his firm. As an account executive, the major portion of his days were spent servicing accounts of individuals as well as banks and institutions.

On April 21, 1960, Bob was elected a member of The New York Stock Exchange, acting as a floor partner for his firm. In this capacity, he executed buy and sell orders placed through his firm.

On January 1, 1965, B. W. Pizzini & Co., Inc. and Hay, Fales & Co. were merged to create Hay, Fales, Pizzini & Co., Inc. At this time, Bob decided to go out on his own and become an individual member of The New York Stock Exchange.

He is married to the former Joyce Haviland and resides at 30 Canterbury Lane, Short Hills, New Jersey.

The price of memberships since 1950 has ranged from $38,000 to $225,000, with the current sales being around $200,000.

Within the complex machinery and system of regulations created by 173 years of experience, let us trace a transaction that takes place on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange.

Here are four considerations to keep in mind:

1. When you buy, you buy from another person.
2. When you sell, you sell to another person.
3. The Stock Exchange itself neither buys, sells, nor sets prices.
4. The Exchange provides the market place.

LET'S say that a Dr. R. J. Phillips of Baltimore has sold his summer place. After talking things over with a Stock Exchange member firm, he decides to buy common shares in General Motors Corporation. He asks the member firm's registered representative to find out for him what General Motors shares are selling for on the Exchange.

Over a wire to his New York office the representative asks for a "quote" on General Motors. A clerk in the firm's New York office dials the quotation department at the Exchange and hears, over an automatic tape announcer, the quotation on General Motors. Current quotations on all listed securities are received by the quotation department over direct wires from each trading post on the floor. Each stock is assigned a particular location at one of the eighteen posts on the trading floor and all bids and offers in a stock must take place at that location.

The clerk in the New York office immediately reports to Baltimore that General Motors is quoted "99 to a quarter." This means that, at the moment, the highest bid to buy General Motors common stock is $99 a share and the lowest offer to sell is $99.25 a share.

Dr. Phillips learns that 100 shares will cost him approximately $9,900 plus a commission.

He tells the registered representative to go ahead. The latter writes out an order to buy 100 shares of GM "at the market" and has it wired to his New York office where it is phoned to his firm's partner on the floor of the Exchange. "At the market" means at the best price possible at that time. The floor partner hurries over to the trading post where the stock is traded.

About the same time, a Seattle hardware man, James Greenway, decides he'll sell his 100 shares of General Motors to get funds to enlarge his store. He calls his broker, gets a "quote," tells his broker to sell. That order, too, is wired to the floor. Greenway's broker also hurries to the post. Just as he enters the General Motors "crowd," he hears Phillips' broker calling out, "How's Motors?" Someone—usually the specialist—answers, "99 to a quarter."

Phillips' broker could, without further thought, buy the 100 shares offered at  $99\frac{1}{4}$ , and Greenway's broker could sell his 100 shares at 99. In that event, and if their customers had been looking over their shoulders, the customers probably would have said, "Why didn't you try to get a better price for us?" They would have been right. That's what a broker is expected to do.

EVERY broker is charged with the responsibility of getting the best price he can for his customer. When he enters the "crowd" on the floor he exercises his experience, knowledge and brokerage skill. He makes split-second decisions.

Here's how Phillips' and Greenway's brokers might figure as each seeks the best price for his customer:

Phillips' broker: I can't buy my 100 at 99. Someone has already bid 99 and no one will sell at that price. Guess I'd better bid  $99\frac{1}{8}$ .

Greenway's broker hears Phillips' broker bid  $99\frac{1}{8}$  and instantly shouts, "Sold 100 at  $99\frac{1}{8}$ ." They have agreed on a price and the transaction takes place.

Here is the auction market in operation. Over and over again every day this procedure is repeated on the floor of the Exchange.

The two brokers complete their verbal agreement by noting each other's firm name and reporting the transaction back to their phone clerks so that their customers can be notified.

All Members of
The Exchange
Must own a "Seat"
. . . But there's Nothing Sedentary About Their Day!

Twelve of these bags were required to contain the day's accumulated debris. Below illustrates best the hubbub of transaction. The market has just opened.

In the meantime, an Exchange employee has sent a record of the transaction to the ticker department for transmission over the ticker network. Normally in a few minutes it is printed simultaneously on about 3600 stock tickers in over 700 cities in this country, Puerto Rico, Hawaii and Canada. It appears like this: GM99 $\frac{1}{8}$ . The number of shares in a round lot transaction is specified only when more than 100 shares are involved—otherwise only the stock's symbol and price are printed.

Thus within a few minutes Dr. Phillips has arranged to exchange the proceeds from the sale of his summer cottage for 100 shares in the World's largest automobile company; Jim Greenway has sold his shares in that company for money to expand his own business.

In conclusion, a word about commission rates. Commissions charged by Stock Exchange members are among the lowest for the transfer of any property—on average about one per cent. Commissions are figured on the following basis for each 100 shares:

On a purchase or sale between $100 and $399.00, two per cent plus $3. The minimum commission is $6.

On a purchase or sale from $400 to $2399.99, one per cent plus $7.

On a purchase or sale from $2400 to $4999.99, one-half of one per cent plus $19.

On a purchase or sale amounting to $5000 or more, one-tenth of one per cent plus $39, provided that amount does not exceed $75 per 100-share transaction.

The federal government collects a transfer tax of four cents per $100 of actual value of the shares sold or transferred. The minimum tax per transaction is four cents; the maximum tax per share is eight cents on stock selling at $200 or more.

New York State levies a transfer tax of from one to four cents a share, based on selling price of the stock.

Federal and state transfer taxes are paid by the seller.

Yes, the Exchange is a fascinating place. You should stop in next time you're in New York City.

Heralds on the Main Market Place in Cracow

LIVING in an age of vastly improved communications and transportation, of unprecedented mass travel and the miracles of TV, even the American who never has been abroad is inclined to think he knows what life is like in Hongkong or Acapulco, Tel Aviv or

Madrid, and as to tourist centers like London or Rome, he is generally happy to escape yet another stack of color slides his friends would like to show, or show off. In these circumstances it may seem highly improbable that a traveler who is not a professional journalist stationed in that country could discover anything of real interest to a wider public. And yet there still are virtually "unknown" countries where even a brief stay may yield eye-opening experiences well worth sharing with others.

For my "Refresher Year" I had submitted to the College a plan under which I would spend most of the time at a large European center working on the completion of a book; some months traveling to gather up-to-date information on the Common Market and "Efra"; but if at all possible, I intended to get at least a glimpse behind the Iron Curtain. On the whole, we could stick to our plan. About half a year was spent in Switzerland, several months en route through England, France, Italy, and Germany. Naturally, our stay in these tourist centers, though thoroughly enjoyable and instructive, did not reveal to us anything that had not been noticed by others. How different were our nine days behind the Iron Curtain!

We had chosen Poland rather than any other so-called "satellite" country because Mrs. Prinz speaks the language—a cardinal fact in totalitarian country where interpreters are almost certain to be agents of the secret police! Besides, we hoped to use certain personal connections.

Our first attempts to get some information had strange though not discouraging results. The official pamphlets handed out by tourist agencies in London extolled the advantages of travelling in Poland and particularly of hunting in her great forests; but at the same time they contained massive doses of political propaganda about the profoundly Polish character of those provinces that had, up to 1945, long been under German domination. This was the first intimation we were to receive that nationalism, not Communism, is the leitmotif of Polish propaganda abroad—just as it is the strong spiritual force that keeps the struggle between Communists and their foes within bounds and keeps the country going.

THE official Polish attitude towards Western tourists appeared in quite different a light when, somewhat later, we tried to obtain our visas. First, there were endless forms to fill in and amazing questions to answer. Just what kind of persons were we? What was the purpose of our trip? When and where and by what means of transportation did we propose to enter Poland? What places did we want to visit and how many days spend at each? Did we have relatives in the country? When all these questions were answered satisfactorily we would be asked to pay for everything in advance—particularly for our stay at the hotels that would be designated to us for each place, and for transportation (railway only first class!). Thereafter we would probably receive our visas! But perhaps the worst feature of this system—if system it be—was the virtual impossibility to change a plan once it had received the stamps of approval from all the bureaucrats concerned. A plan is a plan! When a clerk of the American Express Company in Zurich that acted as the agent of the official Polish Tourist Agency "Orbis" made a blunder that would cost us a good deal of time and money by making us travel needlessly back and forth we protested but gave in as any attempt to correct the mistake would have once more involved long delays.

IN VIEW of all this red tape one may, of course, ask whether the Polish government wishes to encourage or to bar tourism from the West. But this question would be rather naive. Every large bureaucracy—including that in Washington, D. C.—is likely to include agencies working more or less at cross purposes—a phenomenon rooted not so much in personal jealousies as in the conflicting interests the agencies represent. Thus in the Polish case the fear of espionage and subversion, the obsession with internal security, and probably also the enthusiasm for thorough planning make for innumerable precautions and restrictions while the hope to favorably influence Western public opinion and, above all, the lure of foreign exchange from tourism pull in the opposite direction. The traveler, caught in the middle between such conflicting policies, begins to understand that this is only the first of a multitude of Polish paradoxes.

To the average American tourist probably the most amazing and certainly the most dangerous of Polish regulations concerns that prosaic little matter: money. The rate of exchange at which we had to pay our expenses beforehand was 24 Zlotys per dollar. But at the same time well-known Zurich banks were offering to sell some seventy Zlotys for every dollar! Illegal? Well, of course, the clerks shrugged, naturally it was forbidden to take Zlotys into Poland but that was none of their business and, besides, the controls were not so thorough! Later, in Vienne, right before we boarded the train that was to take us to Cracow, the clerk at the money exchange office on the railway station urged us not to pass up the opportunity: "I give you 80 Zlotys per dollar. You can hide it." And right after our arrival at Cracow, a horrid-looking woman, her face heavy with layers of makeup, followed us on the street. "You are Americans? Don't you have dollars? I give you one hundred." She was hard to get rid of, I strongly suspect she was an agent of the secret police sent to trip up the unwary. All through our stay in Poland, the cry for dollars was to follow us. We even learned that apart from the huge black market there is more than one official exchange rate! For instance, in order to encourage Americans, Canadians, and so forth to send money to their Polish relatives, the government grants a special exchange rate of 72 per dollar! But then again this rate does not appear to be dependable—"they may give you coupons instead," we were privately told. "They," of course, means the authorities whose decisions the average citizen has learned to accept . . .

The traveler whose economic notions were shaped under conditions of stable currencies and a free market may find all this utterly confusing. Indeed, he may even ask about the "real value" of the Zloty, its "purchasing power par." But then it dawns upon him that in a country as thoroughly divorced from the world market as Poland such questions are without meaning. For instance, prices for food vary greatly. Such imported "luxury" goods as oranges, lemons, sardines are extremely expensive, a can of sardines which in the U. S. costs about thirty cents comes to thirty Zlotys—which corresponds to the illegal exchange rate of $1 = 100 Zlotys. Indeed, a Polish economist (and in official position at that!) told me he regarded that rate of 1 : 100 as realistic. However, such remarks cannot be taken at face value but rather as the expression of a deep-seated and widespread desire to utter the most dreadful heresies against the régime—at a safe distance from the secret police. (In this case as in many others the similarities between present-day Poland and Nazi Germany seemed to me rather striking—altho' on balance the Nazi tyranny was incomparably worse than present conditions in Poland.) There really is no equation or standard of comparison between prices in a free market country and those in a planned economy. Certain goods—such as meat and butter—may or may not be available at official prices—and when they are available one must stand in line to get them. They are quite likely to be obtainable on the black market! But on the other hand, the Polish government takes its obligations towards education, art, and culture very seriously, and if the purchasing power of the Zloty could be measured by the price of theater and concert tickets even the official tourist rate may seem a bargain. Nor can it be honestly contended that all this care serves only the propaganda needs of the Communist party. During our stay, Verdi operas were performed, as well as some ultra-modern music, in a huge concert hall at Wroclaw we heard thundering applause for the French chansonnier Sasha Distel and in Warsaw we even saw an old-fashioned, somewhat silly and in any case quite unpolitical comedy by Sholem Aleichem, performed in Yiddish and, like everything else, subsidized by the government! Add to this the fact that many services, including education up to the university level, are free, and the impossibility of economic comparisons between such a country and the U. S. should be clear. In Poland a worker or middle-bracket employee would probably never dare to think of buying a car as the government planners deliberately restrict the production and set prices prohibitively high. But if he has a highly gifted son or daughter he need not worry about how to finance his education!

Professor Arthur M. Prinz of the Department of Economics, a teacher at Dickinson for 17 years, recently returned from a half year abroad where he gathered, in England, France, Italy, Germany and Poland, data for a book soon to be published. His nine days behind the Iron Curtain revealed a multitude of Polish paradoxes that he has been willing to share with Dickinsonians through THE ALUMNUS.

TO THE foreign observer, the most frightening aspect of life in Poland is the extent of graft, thievery, dishonesty, and moral cynicism. However, by no means all of this can be blamed on the totalitarian régime in general and the detailed but inefficient economic planning in particular. Some of the greatest evils are due to the low standard of living of a people which, in 1945, had to start almost from scratch after the appalling material destruction, the savage oppression and moral degradation which Poland had suffered during the five years of Nazi occupation and the final retreat before the advancing Russians. Of the depth of this Polish tragedy few Americans seem to be aware, nor do most of us realize that, owing to Russian pressure, Poland could not accept any Marshall Plan aid so that the large measure of reconstruction that has been achieved—especially the re-building of Warsaw on the same place where the proud city had been razed to the ground—was the result of the sacrifices of a people still bleeding from a thousand wounds. At the same time, however, the new régime, here as in other satellite countries, initiated a policy of forced industrialization which could and can proceed only at the expense of the consumer. For a long time therefore the standard of living was extremely low. Today it has improved to the point where probably nobody goes really hungry or lacks the most necessary clothing. And there is a good deal of hope for the future when the industrialization will begin to pay off. But for the time being there is a great deal of suffering, housing conditions being especially atrocious. This lack of a hundred comforts that we take for granted and the cruel memory of 25 years of privation have naturally made most people hard, bitter, and selfish, and ready to use trickery to get their way. To what an extent these evils have been aggravated by the curtailment of individual freedom at the hands of an apparently ubiquitous snooping secret police and a huge, often bungling, and not always honest economic bureaucracy is hard to gauge. But the bitter fruits are there for everyone to see.

Dusk was falling on the streets of Cracow when my wife and I, still shaken by the dismal impression of the almost totally destroyed former Jewish quarter we had seen, passed a newsstall and I asked her to buy a paper. I do not remember whether we were speaking English or German. In any case, an elderly person, hearing the unaccustomed sounds, looked at us, visibly excited. What country did we come from? Really, America? It was obvious she had a burning desire to speak but kept anxiously looking around whether somebody might be listening. A few minutes later we were walking together through the darkening streets and Maria (let this be her name) was pouring out her heart, with a deep sense of relief at the opportunity to speak freely without fear of being denounced. Like many Poles in Cracow (especially of the older generation) she had fluent German. Here, she said, everybody has two incomes: a legal one on which he hardly can live—and another one. I objected that I could not see this; the higher officials may of course take bribes, but what about the little salesgirl or the employee in a butcher's shop? Maria knew the answer. Let us say I go into a shop to buy three yards of cloth for a dress. I pay the official price for three yards but when at home I unwrap the parcel I find a few inches missing. The salesgirl will play this trick over and over again so that she has some cloth to sell on the black market. Or try to buy meat. When after an hour of standing in line your turn finally comes the butcher hastily wraps up your parcel. At home you find it contains mostly bones. But if you happen to have something the butcher is interested in or if you buy on the black market you can get very good meat. Maria spoke of the enormous extent of thievery and alcoholism. Even in the churches, she said, we have signs "Beware of pickpockets!" Describing the plight of lawyers, doctors, and dentists who were just in the process of being turned into state employees, she told us the following story. A lawyer was visited by a man who had run afoul of the law and was afraid of being jailed. He implored the lawyer to take his case and promised him a special (illegal) fee of two thousand Zlotys. The attorney accepted the fee and tried to defend the client but lost—as he had almost expected. From his jail cell, the client writes the lawyer that unless he promptly returned the three thousand Zloty he had illegally accepted he would be denounced to the authorities. The lawyer paid the three thousand!

Exaggerated? From the point of view of the cultured urban middle class to which Maria belongs her picture was probably not overdrawn. One must only remember that despite the heroic recent attempts at industrialization Poland is still largely a rural nation and that while industry is thoroughly collectivized and trade and the professions are being absorbed by the state economy, it is perhaps the greatest of all Polish paradoxes that virtually all the arable land is in the hands of individual peasants tilling their own soil—a fact that probably accounts for Poland's ability to feed her rapidly growing population fairly adequately. There also can be little doubt that the industrial working class—regarded as the main support of any Marxist régime—is relatively much better off than the old urban middle and upper classes. But while suffering naturally is most intense among the latter, dissatisfaction, cynicism, and a boundless desire to “get away from it all” are rampant. One of the most surprising signs of this frame of mind was the tremendous interest shown by all kinds of people in even the slightest hope of emigrating to America! In Warsaw we took a taxi to the office of the Polish airline. This was sufficient to arouse the keenest curiosity of the driver who, like most people in that city, spoke Polish only. On hearing we were Americans he burst out that he had a cousin in Brooklyn and wanted to join him; indeed, he had long started preparations: as it was impossible to take money out of Poland he was investing his savings in gold and diamonds! More than once, even card-carrying members of the party confided to us that though their own life was more or less spent they would love to see at least their children go to live in a free country . . . (Needless to say that under present circumstances all this is, to put it mildly, “crying for the moon”; for even if Polish exit visas were not so exceedingly hard to get (especially for the young) the microscopically small Polish immigration quota in this country would dash nearly all hopes).

After the ravages of World War II, Polish museums really do not have much to show. But what's left is treasured by the people and the government takes exemplary care. This picture, by the Italian painter Bernardo Canaletto, shows Warsaw in the 18th Century. (Warsaw National Museum)

But these and many other signs of dissatisfaction with existing conditions should not be overestimated. In particular, they do not mean that the present régime is without popular support. No doubt the presence of foreigners from the West provides a rare opportunity to let off steam. But often even those who had just indulged in the most vitriolic criticism would suddenly pause and stress that, of course, Poland's situation was extremely difficult and the Gomulka régime must be given much credit for trying its utmost to preserve the very maximum of Polish independence. Everybody feels that Soviet Russia—feared and somewhat despised though she be—provides the only effective protection against Germany that, far from recognizing Poland's Western frontiers, tolerates a noisy revisionist agitation carried on mostly by the large expellee associations who even have one of their leaders, Herrn Seebohm, in the Ehrhard cabinet. The Gomulka régime deliberately exploits these fears and does everything to keep them alive. From all over Poland, every school class is taken to see Auschwitz, Hitler's infamous concentration camp where millions of people were killed. Were it not for the fear of Germany, the old pro-Western Polish tradition would break through much more powerfully. That there exists among the Polish people a tremendous reservoir of good will for the West and especially for America, was plain wherever we went—just as some months later it was shown, for the whole world to see, in the tumultuous reception accorded the then Attorney General Robert Kennedy. If the American government could see its way to recognize Poland's Western frontiers, its stock in that country would soar dramatically and Russia's hold on the Poles would be weakened. Unfortunately, the State Department in its inscrutable wisdom does just the opposite by permitting an ever closer military collaboration with West Germany, increasing Polish anxieties.

BUT quite apart from its sustained efforts to preserve Polish independence in the field of foreign policy, the Gomulka régime is also domestically in some ways far more liberal than are the masters of other Iron Curtain countries. Thus I had heard in Switzerland from professors who had investigated Russian libraries and spoken with scholars how extremely difficult, if not impossible it was for them to get modern Western literature and keep in touch with Western thought. I made a point of checking on this in Poland and found conditions, once again, quite paradoxical. While it is true that not only the Polish press must stick to the party line but that you cannot buy a foreign newspaper on the streets of Warsaw or Wroclaw that does not happen to be the organ of the Communist party of that country, things are entirely different in the Universities! I was given the opportunity to check the catalogues of an economic seminar—and found all the standard works of recent Western thinking: there were Harrod and Samuelson, and even such definitely anti-communist writers as Hayek, Roepke, and von Mises. Indeed, Keynes' masterwork had been translated into Polish in 1956, under the present régime! Thus there can be but little doubt that the Poles know more about Western thought than we know about theirs!

Over and over again we felt in Poland that, no matter how wary the régime may be of Western tourists, the people themselves are happy to have contacts with the West and will receive the traveler with kindness and keen human interest.
