SCIENTIST LOOKS AT HUMANITIES

by Professor John E. Benson Chairman, Department of Chemistry

Since C. P. Snow's book, The Two Cultures and the Scientific Revolution, was published in 1959, there has been vigorous and sometimes bitter discussion of the relations between the several disciplines in the academic community. A great deal of this discussion has been valuable because it has led to a deeper understanding of the problems which exist. The fundamental cause of the two cultures, a lack of communication, has been brought into the open and discussed intensively. The basic problem to be solved, the existence of several specialized and confusing vocabularies, is being attacked in a variety of ways designed to acquaint one culture with the other. Complacent faculties and students with narrow interests have been jolted into a re-examination of the aims of education, and the value of a broad, liberal education is being reasserted. At Dickinson and other schools these positive results are evident in a weeding out of over-specialized courses, the increasing popularity of the double major and interdisciplinary work and the efforts to combat the intellectual isolation that is such a serious problem for a small school in a small town.

Unfortunately, these positive advances have been partly offset by an insidious infection. An element of helplessness has crept in, the feeling that since there are two cultures, one should "solve" the problem simply by divorcing one completely from the other. A lot of nonsense has been said to the effect that science belongs in universities and technical schools, not in liberal arts colleges.

LIBERAL SCIENCE IN A LIBERAL ARTS COLLEGE

Professor John E. Benson, Chairman of our department of chemistry, received his Ph.D. degree at Princeton University in 1957 where he studied physical chemistry under Sir Hugh Taylor and Hubert Alyea. He spent the summer doing research in catalysis at Stanford University in association with Professor Michel Boudart, famous Belgian trained chemist in Stanford's department of chemical engineering.

The rationale usually given for such reasoning is that there is a fundamental difference between the objectives of scientific and humanistic education, that the two cultures have different ways of operating, and that the thought processes involved are somehow not compatible. The error in this reasoning is that although there may be two cultures, the aims of these cultures are precisely the same. Both seek to set the student free, to permit him to act independently, to read intelligently, to ask meaningful questions, to judge critically, to appreciate the works of others, to make decisions, to think with discipline, to educate himself for the rest of his life and, most important, to contribute facts and ideas and communicate these to others.

Another reason often given for divorcing science education from liberal arts colleges is that small colleges can't do an adequate job, that limitations of time, money, faculty, and physical facilities make it increasingly difficult to offer anything but a second-class science education. Admittedly, some thorny problems exist for the small college that seeks to keep its science departments up-to-date. But these problems have obviously been solved with admirable success by many schools, and it is foolish to throw up our hands now in despair. The result would be a disaster for both cultures since the separation would become a physical reality and not just one of communication and vocabulary.

These are the two points—the striking similarity in the aims of scientific and humanistic education and the feasibility of a good science education in a liberal arts college—that I seek to discuss in this article. The first can be illustrated by a brief examination of two works of genius, one by the composer Bach and the other by the scientist Bohr. The second point can be examined by looking at what constitutes an education in science appropriate to a liberal arts college.

In 1722 Bach composed the first book of The Well-Tempered Clavier. Fascinated by the potential of a keyboard instrument tuned in a tempered scale, he wrote twenty-four preludes and fugues in each of the major and minor keys to illustrate the enormous advantage of the well-tempered scale. In a sense, Bach attacked a practical problem and solved it, but, what is more important, the resulting work (and the second book of twenty-four more preludes and fugues), is a staggering work of genius. Each piece is in itself a gem, the whole a stunning and unified work of art.

The problem facing Bohr nearly two hundred years later in 1913 was really quite similar. Intrigued by the new quantum physics, then only a few years old, he attempted to apply it to a problem that for several years had vexed scientists: how to describe the motion of the electron in the hydrogen atom. Using only the most elementary mathematics that can be understood easily by a college freshman, he united classical mechanics and the concept of quantized energy states to solve his problem. The brilliance of the idea and the stark simplicity of the mathematics make the Bohr theory a work of genius.

When one looks for parallels in the mental processes of Bach and Bohr, one is immediately struck by the similarity. By using his critical judgment, training, mental discipline, and store of facts, each used his independence to develop an idea for the use and enjoyment of others. It doesn't really matter that the forms of music and physics have changed in the intervening years; these works of genius stand for all time.

The key word in the preceding paragraph is independence. Both these men, one a musician and the other a scientist, were liberated and could make use of what they had learned and practiced in their years of education. The same independence is necessary if people of less striking intelligence are to make use of their abilities. Any original idea requires a free spirit for its development, or the idea remains in a crude and primitive form. This is my first point: the final aim of education, then, is independence, and it isn't important whether one is educating a scientist or a humanist. Of course, this independence must be controlled by discipline, knowledge, training and critical judgment if it is to be of any value; otherwise, it will be the independence of the unruly child or the disorganized adult. Consequently, the student must be given the chance to acquire facts, to practice techniques, to test his judgment and self-discipline, and to try his hand at working independently.

First Fugue, Book 1, Das Wohltemperierte Klavier, Bischoff.

The responsibility of a science department toward the liberation of a non-science student is fairly easy to define. To return to the example of Bach and Bohr again, it is not necessary that a scientist understand the details of the construction of a fugue or that he have extensive practice in music theory to appreciate what Bach accomplished in The Well-Tempered Clavier. All he needs is a historical perspective, an elementary knowledge of musical forms, and a guide to the literature of music. By reading and self-education he can then strike out on his own to acquire what else he needs. Admittedly, he lacks the discipline and training to accomplish anything really significant, but at least he can appreciate the "other culture" if he will only make the effort.

CHAP. 18]

BOHR'S MODEL OF THE ATOM 39

Classically, since the electron is accelerated, this system should radiate. To avoid this difficulty, Bohr broke completely with tradition. Bohr assumed: (4) that the electron can move around the nucleus only in certain orbits, and not in others (classically, no particular orbit is preferable to any other); (2) that these allowed orbits correspond to definite stationary states of the atom, and in such a stationary state the atom is stable and does not radiate (Bohr avoided the classical difficulty by simply assuming that it was not a difficulty in these special circumstances!*); (3) that in the transition of the electron from one stable orbit to another, radiation is emitted or absorbed, the frequency of the radiation being given by

where ΔE is the energy difference between the two stationary states and k is Planck's constant. (There was nothing quite so nonclassical as a formula with Planck's constant in it.)

The problem of choosing these special orbits out of all the possible ones remained. Bohr's condition is that the angular momentum mer be an integral multiple of $h = h 2\pi$:

$$mer = n\hbar, \quad n = 1, 2, \dots$$
 (18-19)

This condition is equivalent in a certain sense to Planck's condition on an oscillator. Solving Eqs. (18-17) and (18-19) for r and r, we obtain and $r = n^2\hbar^2/me^2$.

If u = 1, then $r = a_0$, the radius of the first Bohr orbit;

$$a_0 = \hbar^2/mc^2 = 0.52917 \times 10^{-8} \text{ cm}$$

then

$$r = n^2 a_-$$
 (18.21)

Using this value of r in Eq. (18-18) for the total energy yields

where the subscript on E indicates that the energy depends on the integer n. Equation (18-22) expresses the energy entirely in terms of fundamental constants, ϵ , h, m, and the integer n. Consider two stationary states, one described by the integer n and the other by the integer k. The difference in energy of these two states is

$$\Delta E_{n2} = E_n - E_k = \frac{e^2}{2a_n} \left(\frac{1}{k^2} - \frac{1}{n^2} \right)$$

The Bohr theory, Physical Chemistry, Castellan, Page 397

The same is true for the non-scientist who is acquiring a knowledge of science. He must be given a sense of historical perspective, some elementary theoretical basis for his self-education, and a knowledge of where he can find more information. The rest is up to him.

The problem of educating a scientist is much more complicated because of the additional training which is needed and the much higher level of independence which must be developed. The proliferation of the scientific literature and the rate at which scientific knowledge is growing make the job of educating a budding scientist a full-time assignment for both the student and the teacher. The first requirement, therefore, is dedicated teachers and students. Without them, the task is indeed hopeless. Fortunately for liberal arts colleges, they have had and continue to have a high proportion of good teachers. Also, fortunately, the smaller schools have been able to attract a nucleus of students who have broad interests and, at the same time, a clear view of their professional objectives. (My personal opinion, however, is that the liberal arts colleges must become more active in recruiting a higher proportion of such students, not only in the sciences but also in the humanities.)

The limitations of time, faculty, and equipment require that the small science department offer no "fluff" courses. Furthermore, the courses themselves and the teaching of them must be solid and well organized. There is little room for courses of a specialized nature and for discursive teaching. The courses that are offered must be carefully planned to encompass the more important concepts, facts, and techniques the student needs to know. This, of course, is exactly what small science departments have done. In order to keep the course offerings to a minimum, the organization and teaching of the courses are carefully coordinated and closely structured.

It is interesting to note in this respect that the sequence of chemistry courses offered in many liberal arts colleges is almost identical. I recently talked to a chemistry student from Oberlin who was spending the summer at Stanford and learned that his program was almost identical to Dickinson's, even in the material discussed in each course. Another example is Princeton, where the program in chemistry has changed very little in fifteen years and is only slightly more extensive than Dickinson's. The implication is that specialized courses are not necessary for a good education, even at a large university with its tremendous resources.

But how does one keep up with the growth of science? Since courses can't be added at will for each fundamental discovery or new technique, apparently one can do one of two possible things. First, the existing courses can be kept and their contents constantly reviewed and changed. Or the less advanced courses can be dropped to make room for new courses at the higher level. Each of these plans has a serious drawback. The first, which should be done periodically by any college department, hampers the more talented student in his zeal for moving ahead rapidly, and ultimately can produce a student body of uniformly average ability. The second can lead to a highly-specialized department which attracts only the best students. In either case, the result is a uniform student body, a tragic consequence for a liberal arts college that aims for breadth of interests in its students and seeks to train students for a variety of roles.

Is THERE yet another possibility? I believe that there is, that this other choice is the salvation of the small science department and that it is particularly appropriate for liberal arts colleges. In fact, it is the program now used at Dickinson, where course work is supplemented by advanced placement and independent study.

By means of a program of up-to-date basic courses and advanced placement, the program for each student can be worked out to suit his pre-college background. This gets around the problem of a program designed only for students of average abilities. Because a careful watch must be kept on the progress of the students to prevent stagnation or serious overloading, such a program is eminently workable in a liberal arts college where one does not have a large number of students.

In addition to advanced placement, the small school can seek to develop student self-education by independent study and research spread over the four years. However, unless this is truly independent study and not simply a program of baby lectures, the time involved becomes prohibitive. Consequently, the choice of students who participate in such a program must be carefully done. The liberal arts college again has a tremendous advantage over the larger schools because the best students can be selected carefully and allowed to dip into special fields of interest to them. To give an example, if Dickinson had a computer and if a better student indicated an interest in learning to use it, the student could be guided to the literature of writing FORTRAN programs and then allowed to try his hand at solving a problem of interest to him and a staff member. The student gets an introduction to the computer, both get some experience, and the problem gets done.

The education of a student is a gradus ad Parnassum. The steps along the way vary in difficulty, and our task is to choose the path to suit the student. Fortunately, we are blessed with a flexible program that lets us lead the student by stages, according to his abilities, from the simple memorizing of facts to the independence of mind that is the aim of education.

Bosler Hall, constructed in 1884, and named for James W. Bosler, will be used as an instructional facility when the new library becomes functional.

The Last Roundup BOSLER

by Professor Charles C. Sellers Librarian of the College

N AN earlier issue, the Alumnus took a fond last look at Bosler Hall, where students in these final climactic years have been crowded elbow to elbow at the old tables or have had to seek privacy at a "carrel" under the steam pipes below, and where make-do additions to the crowded shelving have tortured the Dewey Decimal System into convolutions only to be followed by faith and intuition. Now that our new building is under construction, and all physical problems soon to be resolved, we should take an equally frank look at a more important (and more cheering) aspect—the books themselves. It is, after all, the quality and size of its book collection that gives stature to an institution of learning, while the building makes possible its continuing growth and its success in meeting the institutional objective.

The purpose of a college library is to satisfy all the needs of the curriculum, to enable faculty to keep abreast of current progress in their subjects, and to support as well as possible the work of those who are advancing the frontiers by research. Ours has been the situation of an old library whose heritage from the past has long been its principal strength. Happily, most of the 2,500 books given us by John Dickinson in 1784 are still on our shelves. They were old books even then, brought together by two outstanding book collectors of the Colonial period, Isaac Norris, father and son (the father and grandfather of Mrs. Dickinson), so that it can be rightly said that we had a distinguished rare book collection before we had any other. Indeed, in 1791 the Belles Lettres Society decided to form a library of its own, so that there would be some books of contemporary interest, useful to students, on campus. Until the erection of Bosler Hall, 1884-86, Dickinson's book resources were a tripartite affair -College, Belles Lettres and Union Philosophical-with the two student collections, though they often duplicated one another, by far the more generally useful. Bosler housed all three libraries under one roof, but it was not until thirty years later that our first professional librarians began the task of bringing all together into one coherent college library. Previously, the societies had of course had student librarians, while the College Librarianship had almost uniformly gone to a professor of ancient or modern languages—the entire Dickinson gift had been in foreign tongues, and there was an obvious rationale in selecting a man who could read them.

Miss May Morris established the Dickinsoniana Collection, with the Dickinson-Norris books as its central feature, put others not clearly related to the undergraduate program in storage, and, with the help of a liberal Carnegie Corporation grant, began a systematic build-up in support of undergraduate needs, working by the Shaw and Lamont lists and by her own good judgment. By 1944, when Fremont Rider first brought out his startling statistics showing that the active college libraries had been regularly doubling in size approximately every 16 years, Dickinson's figures were averaging very creditably in with the rest. Yet when, in the 1950's, we were nearing the 100,000 volume count, a figure frequently cited as the ideal "undergraduate library," the proportion of books ideal for ordinary undergraduate use was still not nearly so high. Meanwhile, the most significant trend of the times was overtaking us-the emphasis on research. Students must now be prepared to conduct original investigations of their own, must be able to keep pace with the rapid progress of knowledge throughout their lives. It is this that has given libraries the place they hold in the educational world today, and that has swept aside the old concept of "a teaching college" with strictly limited library resources.

HROUGH the more recent years, therefore, we have concentrated strongly on reference works by which research is both launched and sustained, on basic source materials such as state papers and the like, and on a periodical list representing, more than anything else, the contemporary advance of knowledge. The Library has reason to be pleased with this effort, in which grants from the Board of Higher Education of the Methodist Church, the Association of College and Research Libraries, and gifts from individual friends have had a considerable part. Simultaneouslyhaving an entire floor, Bosler's "Attic," full of uncatalogued "Old Collection" books-we have been recataloguing appropriate items from these as fast as our small staff can handle the work. The program here has been to select titles with a view to organizing specific research opportunities, forming a core of source material to be strengthened by purchase later. The first field chosen was old fiction, a task still in progress after ten years, though now retarded by lack of space on the Rare Book Room shelves. These volumes, ranging in date from mid-eighteenth century to the eighteen-thirties, had all been withdrawn as obviously unrelated to routine undergraduate work, and now, after their long purgatorial sojourn under the eaves, go back again for reasons equally clear. Last year they were used and given an accolade of praise by Dr. Harrison R. Steeves, of Columbia, a scholar who is himself a novelist. We received an appreciative word in his Before fane Austen. The Shaping of the English Novel in the Eighteenth Century (N. Y., 1965), while privately he urged us to publish a bibliography of what he called one of the best such collections in the country.

Every college library should collect the Bible in as many variant editions and languages as possible. This one work permeates our literature, history, our whole culture, and it is unfortunate that in the past we have made no such systematic effort as it deserves. Users of our library will ever be grateful to the kind donors who have filled this need for us, and so well. We owe a debt, above all, to the late Dr. Edwin E. Willoughby, '22, and to his sister, Dr. Frances L. Willoughby, '27. He, Chief Bibliographer of the Folger Shakespeare Library, was a front-rank authority and, as his means enabled him, a collector in this field. He had long been a friend and contributor to our Rare Book Room, and after his tragic death it was she who gave his collection and his papers to the College. The Willoughby Bibles are the sort of core of original works, many now virtually unobtainable, about which supporting collections should be built. Here, for instance, is the first edition of the "Great Bible" of 1539, sponsored by King Henry VIII. Most of it was printed by François Regnault in Paris, where the sheets were seized by the authorities, sold for waste paper, cannily purchased on those terms by the English, and the work completed in London. Here also is the 1553 edition, excessively rare due to the success of "Bloody Mary" in destroying most of the impression—and others, down to the King James Version of 1611, of which there are several examples.

GRADUALLY, by gift and purchase, the Library has added other works of primary bibliographical and historical importance. For years, we owned but one title in the realm of incunabula, the "cradle age" of printing, before 1500. This was Caesar's Commentarii, printed by Fontana at Venice in 1499, and given us, probably in 1840, when he was Principal of our Grammar School, by Levi Scott, later a Bishop of the Methodist Church. Within recent years we have had gifts of eight others, ranging in date from 1480 to 1499. One of these must be rated as the gift of a kindly Providence, since it turned up in a litter of old textbooks sent over from Denny Hall. Such works, and even the illuminated manuscripts which preceded them, can still be bought, but at prices beyond our range. Single pages of illumination or early printing are more easily obtainable and (while unhappy about the practice of dismembering even defective copies) we have acquired a few of these, including a page from Ralph Higden's Polycronicon of 1482, printed by William Caxton, England's first printer, and the colophon page of the magnificently illustrated Nuremberg Chronicle, October 5, 1493.

As with the Willoughbys, donors often deserve more credit than librarians in establishing study and research opportunities. An outstanding example is the gift by Dr. Roscoe O. Bonisteel, '12, of books and manuscripts covering the entire career of John Drinkwater, accompanied by a fund for continuing

Alumni Authors Take Note

The College Library has a place for all books by or about alumni (arranged on the shelves by Class), and welcomes also for its files magazine articles, offprints, doctoral theses on film, or memorabilia of any sort. "The Dickinsoniana Collection" is an archive on College history, of which all Dickinsonians are a part, and all are urged to help in making it as complete as possible.

Mrs. Cordelia Neitz, Head Cataloger, with the oldest book in the Library, the Sermones Discipuli of Johannes Herolt, printed at Cologne in 1474. This addition to our small collection of incunabula came to us in 1960 as the gift of Frances L. Willoughby, '27. The capital letters heading each paragraph are rubricated, that is, painted by hand in the red color commonly used in Medieval manuscripts. On the page shown the scribe has added to one a fanciful figure of a bird.

purchases. He has given us also a central element of a collection of western Americana, a field we would never have entered upon our own, but which has received already more general use than the Drinkwater Collection, reinforced (quite independently) by Dr. Milton C. Asbell, '37, with valuable gifts in American travel. From another angle, Mrs. Temple Fay's recent gift of books, papers and relics of Joseph Priestley suddenly advanced us to a front position in an area in which we were already deeply interested. The areas of strength in a college library also reflect, and often profoundly, the presence of men and women on the Faculty whose patience and persistence over the years has gradually built them up: Eric Barnes in Shakespeare, Whitfield Bell, '35 in American History, Mary Taintor in French Literature, and many others.

There is one department in which, when organized with care, a college library can offer its community unusual advantages. Most librarians eschew manuscripts, which require storage, cataloguing and rules for use quite different from books. Yet here are primary sources of which no other copies exist, new ground for study, and new opportunities to publish. A collection of this sort, especially when brought together around certain points of concentration, is a verdant field indeed for the scholar, be he young or old. Ours, like others of its type, began with institutional archives, spreading out into papers of the founders of the College and of such distinguished alumni as Buchanan, Taney, Conway and others, and from there on into background material such as the politics of Buchanan's long career. Our Slifer-Dill Papers, gift of the son of an alumnus, hold about 3,000 items on Pennsylvania politics in the Civil War, before and after. Our Bridges Papers, equal in number, on the other hand, hardly touch College history at all, though a valuable source in American literary history. In all, our manuscript holdings come to about 75,000 pieces, with a nearly equal number waiting to be processed. A small sum has been budgeted for purchases each year, but nearly all are gifts, and almost all of the most valuable are the gifts of Boyd Lee Spahr, who has been sustaining this activity from its very inception.

The Manuscripts Collection of the Library includes autographs of all the Presidents of the United States, commencing with the George Washington letter shown here. The gift of Dr. Boyd Lee Spahr, '00.

The Human Relations Area Files, comprising many thousands of microfilm cards, is a major study and research tool in the field of Anthropology, with value also to students in Economics, History and other fields. Professor H. Wade Seaford, Jr., is here shown selecting material from the Files.

Shown here is a part of our recently-acquired set of the British Museum General Catalogue of Printed Books, a great bibliographical tool valuable also in historical and literary research. Shirley Richardson of the Library staff respectfully returns one of the formidable volumes to its place.

Some of our friends, particularly Boyd Lee Spahr, '00 and Mrs. Proctor D. Foucht, have lent a hand alike to book collection, library service, the building itself. Years ago, Dr. Spahr enrolled us as a member of the thennew Union Library Catalogue of Philadelphia, paying the annual subscription for what has now become a major dependence of our interlibrary loan service, and in part also an advantage, through us, to members of the recently organized Area College Library Cooperative Program. Not only must we depend upon other libraries, but the richer our own resources, the more compelling our duty to share them with others.

LIBRARY is in a sense a living thing, its life dependent upon meeting needs and growing in response to them. Grow our Library must. We are soon to move into new quarters with double the capacity of Bosler, and by the Rider formula that limit will have been reached by our bicentennial year, 1973-from just under 150,000 volumes to just over 300,000. We may then be campaigning for an addition, though microprint and other new techniques have already extended average doubling period beyond sixteen years. Yet we shall do well to aim at rapid, planned expansion in the new environment. There is little relationship between this and other college growth factors, such as the size of the student body. A good library is a good library regardless of the number of its users, and an active community of scholars must have strong resources immediately at hand.

This summer, we are taking what may be our final inventory of the books in the old building, our last roundup. Few are aware of it, but the gift of the Bosler Memorial came in part straight from the old Wild West of the 1880's. That was the heyday of "The Carlisle Live Stock Company," whose herds moved across its vast land holdings in the Wyoming Territory, marked with the Bosler brand, guarded by Bosler guns, and watched with jealous terror by the peaceful homesteaders, warned away from the range. Let us not carry the metaphor of books and herd, librarian and cowpoke, too far-nor hesitate to see our rich heritage in terms of a new country and an opening future.

Harrisburg Television Station Taps Dickinson
For Patriotism Program
"Valley Forge Revisited"

Subject is ROTC: "You'll Miss the Beards"

A television section of the Sunday Patriot-News carried an article entitled "Patriotism: A Renewed Look."

"Vexed," the story began, "by the Vietnam War, Pennsylvanians readily admit that patriotism is harder to come by these turbulent days than it was in the earlier days of the century.

"Television Station WHP has undertaken an ambitious series of one-hour color documentaries in an effort to reignite some of the feelings for country that have gone dormant in many a breast, even in the trying hours of summer 1966."

"Valley Forge Revisited" is the name of the series and the particular program that dealt with Dickinson's ROTC was entitled "ROTC Training: You'll Miss the Beards."

The film followed nine Dickinsonians from the area and included considerable script on Dr. Rubendall and Lt. Col. Stanley W. Selander, professor of military science, who commands our ROTC program.

It is not surprising that Dickinson was selected as the subject institution. A team of five inspecting officers put our program under the microscope recently and heartily approved of what they saw. Dickinson received the highest rating an inspection team can make. The occasion was the annual inspection by visiting officers assigned by Headquarters of the First United States Army.

"Valley Forge Revisited" is an endeavor to link the present hopes, dreams, and ordeals of the United States with those of the Continental Army at Valley Forge in the bleak winter of 1777-78.

The Alumnus salutes Col. Selander upon the superiority of his ROTC program and congratulates Dickinson men for causing this warm and complimentary light to be focused upon the College.

Dr. Howard L. Rubendall appears in "Valley Forge Revisited," a WHP-TV documentary that has as its primary function the rekindling of patriotism and love of country. This scene is Memorial Hall in Old West, a national historic landmark.

Spring Sports 33-19; Another Great Year

Dallas Winslow, football and basketball star, was named Dickinson College's "athlete of the year."

The 6-ft. 4-in. senior from Wilmington, Del., received the Richard H. McAndrews Memorial Trophy, the college's top athletic award, at the D Club Dinner last May which honored the spring teams and their coaches and celebrating Dickinson's best years in sports.

The spring teams won 33 of their contests, lost 19. Their individual won and lost records were: golf, 12–1; track, 6–1; tennis, 9–2; baseball, 5–8; lacrosse, 1–7.

The season saw Dickinson capturing another Middle Atlantic Conference title to add to its growing list of such honors, when Steve Hopper, Camp Hill, won medalist honors in the recent championships at Allentown.

The over-all record for the year was 78 victories, 40 defeats and one tie. The Dave Eavenson-coached swimming team was undefeated (8–0) and won the MAC College Division crown.

One of the persons who helped celebrate the highly successful year at the annual banquet was the president of the college, Dr. Howard L. Rubendall, '31.

"Recent years have moved the college ahead significantly in sports," he said. "Dickinson is in a new era in sports. We want to stay in it for a long time to come."

Athletic Director Eavenson said the year was such as to "reflect great credit on those who played and those who coached."

Wib Gobrecht, '52 the football and lacrosse coach, in presenting the athlete-of-the-year trophy to Winslow, pointed out that Winslow won all-conference honors in football and was placed in the all-state honorable mention list. A halfback, he played both offense and defense, intercepted seven passes for a new Dickinson record, giving him a career total of 14, also a school record.

"In basketball, he led the team in rebounding and was so skilled as a guard that he was usually given the task of playing against the best scorer on the other team," said Gobrecht.

He noted that Dallas had been drafted by the Philadelphia Bulldogs of the new Continental League and invited to the Detroit Lions' rookie camp. The tall senior wants to go on to graduate school and has no plans to turn pro.

The following were named the most valuable members of the various spring teams and received handsome trophies: Ed Fedok, Allentown, baseball; Steve Hopper, Camp Hill, golf; Allen Mac-Phail, Baltimore, and John Tassie, Princeton, N. J., lacrosse; John Edwards, Hove, England, tennis; Don Neidig, Summerdale, and Jerry Weiner, Chevy Chase, Md., track.

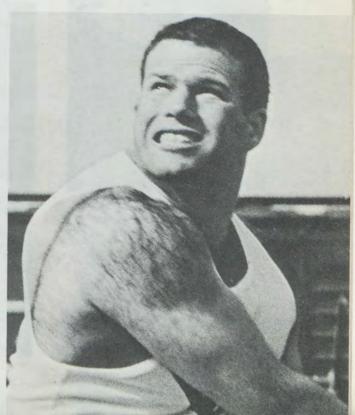

Letters were awarded by the various coaches: Gobrecht, lacrosse; Joseph DuCharme, track; Don Seibert, golf; Raphael Hays, tennis; Bill Rickenbach, baseball.

Edwards, speaking for the tennis team, presented Coach Hays with a handsome silver bowl. Other coaches received appreciation gifts from their squads.

E. Gardner Hays who coached the tennis team with great success from 1931 to 1957 when succeeded by his son; and Vincent J. Schafmeister, Jr., '49, alumni secretary of the college and a former Dickinson football and basketball player; Dean of Students Benjamin D. James '34; Dean of Men N. Ronald Pease, and women's coaches Kathleen Barber and Dolores Lizzer were also introduced.

1966

O Father of all generations, we invoke Thy blessing, and bestow our own, upon our teachers, administrators and peers who have aided our study here and now send us out to work in the world; may we foster their affection as our own for Dickinson College, never becoming cynical about the demands they make upon it, nor about the demands made upon us; grant us wisdom in what we seek for our alma mater, and resourcefulness in using what was given us here; so may we, sharing a lasting gratitude for what has been given us here, lift up Dickinson College continually unto Thee, for Thy guidance and enduring grace.

Amen.

Letters To (And From) The Editor

To the Editor:

May I tell you that I greatly enjoyed your article on Moncure D. Conway. I heard his address at the college when he was given an honorary degree. In December 1907 I was in a pension in Berlin when at dinner a Welsh theological student who was studying at the University of Berlin remarked that Moncure D. Conway had died. Two Americans at the table asked: "Who was Moncure D. Conway?"

The Welshman—his name was Robert Roberts—replied: "He was one of your greatest Americans."

It was a pleasure to read your account of him; and the illustrations are excellent. Looking at the picture of Conway Hall reminded me that it was there I last saw one of my highly esteemed teachers at Dickinson, a Dr. Gooding, who taught philosophy and psychology. That was in the spring of 1912, when I was spending a few days at the then Indian School.

Sincerely, Wilson D. Wallis, '07

To the Editor:

Alumni publications have reached a new high with the publication of the Spring 1966 issue of the Dickinson Alumnus! It is, in my opinion, the finest issue ever to leave the presses of Old Bellaire and certainly should rank with the finest of any school, at any time. Its content, its makeup, its clarity of presentation is a tribute to your continuing revitalization of alumni life and participation in current campus activity.

Dr. Rubendall's candid objectivity in discussion of the "fraternity problem" will, I am sure, find its way to every campus in the country where the Greek letter organization is to be found—and well it should. Too often within recent years have we been subjected to biased discourses of the pro and equally slanted dialogues of the con. The casual disregard of the weaknesses and the puffing of the strengths, the "for" merely for the sake of the "for," and "agin" merely for the sake of protest have removed the subject from the world of honest discussion, thought and analysis. Thank God, at least for Dickinson, Dr. Rubendall has restored sanity to the study of an admitted problem. I do not concur in all of his conclusions nor would he in mine. However, I do respect his analysis predicated upon reason, not upon hysteria or fad of the times. (Even as a fraternity man and fraternity trustee, I have often questioned their total worth, but, questioning is far removed from total condemnation.)

Again, from one encouraged alumnus, heartiest congratulations.

Cordially, George G. Lindsay, '48

To the Editor:

Enclosed is a check for $100.00 to be used for whatever is deemed necessary by the college. With this check goes a reservation. As you know I am now started in a profession whereby my financial position is becoming relatively secure. Since I have such a great love and fond affection for my alma mater I wish to go on record that if Dickinson College is to completely do away with fraternities on the college campus "under faculty advisement" let me advise I am seriously considering withholding any donation in the ensuing years. Dickinson College without fraternities makes it another institution.

As a personal reflection, I owe much to Dickinson College, but I cannot say that it was a college of learning that made me what I am today. As you may or may not know, my background was certainly one of great need when I entered the College of Dickinson. I can also state that it was not the books nor the program of learning that developed whatever I am today. The inter- and intra-fraternity competition, the athletic program in its broad expanse, the fine caliber of teaching professors and last but not least the magnificent student body gave to me the necessary materials to develop from an individual of impoverished background to a graduate student with high ideals intelligently, morally, physically and socioeconomically.

I care not, Vince, what you do with this letter as far as reflection or appeal, and I have nothing but the fondest of memories of "staid Old Dickinson" but if the faculty feels that Dickinson College is only books, buildings and teachers then I am afraid that disillusionment has entered upon them. At least it has upon me.

Sincerely, Wm. J. Zapcic '51, M.D.

To the Editor:

I have read, Vince, and re-read, with the greatest of interest, Dr. Rubendall's address to the Dickinson "Fraternities Symposium." I think so much of it that I hope you have placed a copy in Seth Brook's hands and I would be happy to have this very address made to a Beta convention.

Few of us will agree with all he has to say, but it would be good for our souls to have Dr. Rubendall say these things to us, either at convention or in the Beta Theta Pi Magazine.

I could not agree with his point (or program) number nine, and my disagreement would have nothing to do with racial discrimination. (Beta has no restrictions on membership as you know.) He seems to imply that the college reserves the right to select our membership for us.

Again he seems to imply strongly that our ". . . unchanged rituals determined for a society of fifty years ago are outmoded," and then he reminds us "what can happen when the fraternity forgets its ideals." I have just served on a committee on rituals and we made many changes. Beta has always updated its rituals. But the ideals on which we were founded still remain and I agree with him, we get in trouble when we forget these ideals—as a fraternity or as a chapter. When we lose sight of those ideals we perish or at best, slip perilously. What the fraternity systemand Beta needs above all else is a return to the ideals expressed in our rituals. And I dare say this is true of Phi Kappa Sigma, founded as I recall it in 1850, as it is of Beta, founded in 1939.

I hope you will give President Rubendall's article to Seth and recommend that he do something with it. His message should be heard and discussed and listened to!

Gordon Smythe (Not an Alumnus)

(Editor's note.—Seth Brooks and Gordon Smythe are national officers of Beta Theta Pi Fraternity. Dr. Rubendall's talk was distributed.)

From the Editor:

As one member of the Dickinson family wrote to the Alumni Office, "... whether it was the weather or some other factor, I came away feeling that it was likely the most enjoyable Commencement season which I have experienced. There were numerous comments that the 'mood' was happy and bespoke unity of purpose on the part of all concerned."

It could not have been otherwise because this had been a very good year!

The mental ability and the brilliant and audacious spirit of our G. E. College Bowl Team devastated the maximum number of other institutions with which it was permitted to compete and returned to the campus undefeated champions in this scholarly jousting. Dickinson was richer by a massive silver bowl, $10,500 in scholarship funds, and additional respect for her ivy covered walls.

Indeed, the public relations value of that series of superb performances by our students over national television was beyond measure!

Then Cass and Birnbaum, in their Comparative Guide to American Colleges and Universities, declared Dickinson a Highly Selective College and placed only 19 schools in a grouping of greater altitude. This national recognition is directly related to the reputation Dickinson has acquired for superior faculty and superior student body.

Our student body was certainly superior on the football field winning seven games and losing only one to post the best gridiron record in 28 years!

The swimming team was undefeated and brought us another Middle Atlantic Conference Championship.

That makes four titles we have claimed in as many different sports (basketball, golf and tennis are the others) and very few MAC institutions enjoy that status.

Brains and Brawn!

No wonder constituent affection has expressed itself in such unprecedented dimensions these recent years.

In President Rubendall's speeches at alumni club meetings the lighter moments usually contained a modest acknowledgement of having operated the College in the black and of having won more athletic contests than lost during his tenure.

But there is a deeper message discovered in this chuckle-intending observation. Operating in the black when you are not only a non-profit organization; but a no-profit one is the supreme compliment to fiscal management. This organization that is Dickinson must build in funds for operating costs. Hence its source of life blood, Alumni, must be motivated to give generously, even sacrificially.

To say simply that generally this is not easy is the understatement of the year!

However, this fine old school has something going for her. Two things, actually. Pride and belief. Pride in the past and pride in this exciting present. And belief in the commitment.

So alumni have responded generously and in some instances, we know, sacrificially. Hence a 126 percent increase in annual giving since July of 1963 to what was feared an unreachable goal of $220,000 in 1966. This accomplishment was saluted by the American Alumni Council with a first prize in an alumni recognition program and a check for $3,000. Details in the center insert of this edition of the Alumnus.

A NOTHER notable endorsement of Dickinson's accomplishments and carefully drawn plans for her future came from the Ford Foundation. We have been awarded a challenge grant of two million dollars which will be received annually over a three-year period, based upon the cumulative results of the College's 3-to-1 matching efforts. Thus, we must raise six million dollars to qualify for the full amount of the grant.

Quoting President Rubendall, "All of us may take pride in having been characterized, according to the purpose of the Ford Foundation Special program, as a College committed to superior scholarship with plans and ability to make pace-setting improvements, and with the potential to serve as a center of excellence." Only four other colleges in Pennsylvania have shared in this program, which assumes that regional peaks of excellence in privately supported education are essential to nationwide intellectual vigor and growth and that regional excellence can best be gained by building on existing strength.

Delicious prose! All the more palatable because of Ford's complete understanding of how it is here.

The Alumnus is a publication of the General Alumni Association and is dedicated in part to informing alumni about their College's plans, programs and progress. Fund raising copy has been minimal and even on those rare occasions we have tended to use the soft-sell as we pushed our tambourines.

But the needs of higher education and of this superior institution are sufficiently great, our contribution to the individual and the national welfare so significant, that this bit of hard-sell might be tolerated: We are unabashedly and hardfistedly interested in alumni dollars and ask your continued financial support—even greater support—now that we will receive one dollar from Ford for every three dollars raised.

In the next few months special publications will relate what has been done with the money alumni have given and what will be done with these new funds we seek as the College moves into her high-gear phase of the "Toward a Third Century" program.

Until the detailed reports please know that during the past five years Dickinson has constructed 13 new buildings costing a total of nearly six million dollars. In addition, a new biology building and two new dormitories will be opened this September. Construction of a new two and one-third million dollar library has just begun.

Truly, we are on the move! V.J.S.

THE 1966 DICKINSON FUND $221,642

With appreciation, this section is dedicated to all alumni, parents, and friends who have opened new opportunities at Dickinson through Annual Giving.

WITWER:

I am convinced we have only begun to realize our potential . . .

"It is highly gratifying to learn that for the third consecutive year we have achieved a new record in annual giving. To all members of our Dickinson family, alumni, students, parents, faculty, individual trustees, and friends,—I express the deep appreciation of the College and its Board of Trustees. Of course, a special word of thanks is due Chairman John S. Snyder, '33, Fund Director Evan Frey, '59, and the many alumni leaders who have given unstintingly of their time and talent in raising the record breaking total of $221,642.00.

"The recent rate of growth in annual giving has been remarkable. Only four years ago, contributions totaled less than $100,000.00. But the real significance of the achievement lies not in figures, but in what it foretells. It demonstrates that Dickinsonians are determined to support our bold and well-conceived Ten Year Budget (now in its third year) making possible longoverdue increases in compensation for our distinguished faculty, allowing acquisition of needed and costly educational facilities, increasing substantially our provisions for student aid, and securing a sound base for the current financial operations of the College. The success of the 1966 Campaign is also evidence of our commitment to secure Dickinson's rightful place in the front rank of private liberal arts colleges.

"I am convinced we have only begun to realize our potential of annual giving. Let us keep up the momentum!"— SAMUEL W. WITWER, President, Board of Trustees.

... the world is engaged in a race between education and chaos

"I know what alumni mean to the support of higher education. Last year alumni contributed almost $300 million to the colleges and universities of this Nation. As the father of two daughters, and as the President of a country in which more than half of our citizens are now under twenty-five years of age, I think I know how important that assistance is to the youth of this Nation.

"Throughout my entire life, I have taken seriously the warning that the world is engaged in a race between education and chaos. For the last two and one-half years I have lived here with the daily awareness that the fate of mankind really depends on the outcome of that race."—LYNDON B. JOHNSON, President of the United States.

"It is a cliche to observe that education at all levels is in a state of intense ferment. Additionally, it is now 'big business.' Various studies indicate that as a nation we are putting more of our dollars to work in education than in any other national pursuit except the military. A recent article in Fortune observes, 'Industry is poised to open up the rich education market and could well transform the entire educational system.'

"All of this activity is generating a lot of heat and occasionally light. The influence can well affect for generations our attitudes about values in education relative to our national goals. What seems to be desperately needed pres-

SNYDER:

This money is not only in support of a physical situation. It also underscores an ideal ently is perspective. To my way of thinking this is one of the critical functions of the small liberal arts college in the 'multiversity' world. The success of the 1966 Dickinson Fund testifies to the fact that a good many alumni and friends of the College share this view. This money is not only in support of a physical situation. It also underscores an ideal.

"To all of the people who worked so hard to bring this effort to a successful conclusion go my sincerest thanks. We are stimulated to even higher goals for next year and we begin the effort in the full knowledge that alumni, parents and friends of the College will again say with their dollars that Dickinson's role in today's perplexing educational arena is an essential one."—JOHN S. SNYDER, General Chairman, The Dickinson Fund.

"Of the many who contribute each year to The Dickinson Fund, the greatest number are alumni. Since 'Red' Malcolm conceived the annual giving program for Dickinson over thirty years ago, alumni have responded in increasing number. Oh, of course, there is still plenty of room for improvement—and we'll have it—but there is also plenty of reason for pride.

"We can take great pride in the award you've read about elsewhere in this issue. A national award of this nature from the American Alumni Council is an enormous accomplishment. Many people should be thanked. Many should be praised.

McCARTNEY:

There is still plenty of room for improvement, but there is also reason for pride

"We are going to praise the many alumni who have been involved in Annual Giving as directors, workers, architects and contributors-not just in this past year, but in the years before that had to be for the towering effort that convinced the judges this award belonged to Dickinson.

"If you are a contributor, part of the American Alumni Council Award is yours, just as surely as if your name were listed on the trophy, certificate and $3,000.00 check. If you are a donor, much of Dickinson is yours, just as if you had bought the stones and placed them there, and it carried your name.

"The support of alumni by annual unrestricted giving cannot be overemphasized because of the flexibility it affords our College and in its auxiliary benefits such as the $2,000,000 Ford Challenge Grant. For while unrestricted giving may make it a bit difficult to focus on what our contribution has wrought, the College has demonstrated through its progress that our funds have been put to good use.

"We take pride in what you as an alumni contributor are doing for the College. It's important."-SAMUEL J. McCARTNEY, JR., President, General Alumni Association.

"We near our plunge into Dickinson's third century of service to higher education amid signs of exciting progress on every front. This progress has been accented by the exhilarating accomplishment of the 1966 Dickinson

RUBENDALL:

Annual Giving has become a symbol of our College's vitality and inde-

Fund and has been acknowledged by the Ford Foundation through a challenge grant to the College in the amount of two million dollars.

"It is appropriate that the Ford Grant and Annual Giving should be linked closely. Recent extraordinary advances in Annual Giving have illustrated to Foundation officials that Dickinson's alumni, parents and friends are lined up solidly behind the commitment of this fine old school. And these annual gifts now will be matched by the Foundation.

"It is appropriate that Annual Giving has become a symbol of our College's vitality and independence. Without these unrestricted funds, the most valuable gifts a college can receive, we cannot persist in our tradition of educational excellence consonant with the changing society.

"For nearly two centuries Dickinson's basic purpose has been to graduate men and women programmed to become responsible leaders in education, business, the professions, and government. Your gifts and hard work have made it possible for us to continue this mission and all of us on the campus are grateful." -HOWARD L. RUBENDALL, President, Dickinson College.

"During the May Parent's Advisory Council meeting, it was a pleasure for me to announce that contributions to the Parent's Fund already totaled $22,000, exceeding our goal by 10 per cent. The final talley showed $23,339.∞.

"This proof of interest by parents of Dickinson students is heartwarming.

FERGUSON:

Parents are taking an active part in the ongoing work of the College

As in the past, it reveals that parents are taking an active part in the on-going work of the College. Their signature on a check means that they are enlisting in the ranks with other dedicated Dickinsonians who march toward the goal of 'educational superiority.' It indicates how well parents understand the benefits of higher education, what it means and what it does, not only for their children. but others who follow.

"Contributions made by parents are directed to meet current operating needs. Regular faculty salary increases help Dickinson attract and retain good teachers. Our gifts provide scholarships and student aid for able young men and women. They provide modern laboratory equipment for budding scientists and new books to appease the appetites of our young scholars. The gifts parents make echo throughout Dickinson signifying satisfaction and pleasure with the program the College is producing on the educational stage.

"Our heartfelt thanks go to every one of the 520 contributing families. We also appreciate the many who have labored diligently to encourage parents to achieve this record amount. Any kudos would not be complete, however, if we did not give special acknowledgement to parents of past students who have become active in support of the College under the leadership of Alumni-Parent Chairman, Randall B. Hamrick.

"The 1966 mark will be shattered in 1967, for records are made to be broken." -JOHN B. FERGUSON, JR., President, The Parents Advisory Council.

FREY:

No report can omit special accolades for outstanding performance

"No report on a campaign as fine as the one we have just experienced can omit special accolades for outstanding performances.

"Certainly we must look forward to the day when all classes will tackle the record set by perennial winner Bill Young's Class of 1921—91 per cent participation. Close behind, celebrating their golden anniversary, was the Class of 1916 captained by Albert H. Allison. They posted an 85 per cent mark. The Class of '31 led by Jack Arndt, engineered a portrait of their classmate, Howard Rubendall, as well as a check for Annual Giving.

"At the opposite end of the spectrum, Jerry Bole's Class of '63 established a record 133 contributors, and the Class of 1964 made a solid advance beyond the century mark.

"Congratulations are due our parents. Under the leadership of John B. Ferguson, Jr., Richard O. Smith, and Randall B. Hamrick, parent contributions increased 61 per cent to a record $23,339.

"The accomplishments of the past three years would not have been possible without a united effort supported by hundreds of alumni and parents giving their time, energy and dollars to provide Dickinson with the strength to enter its third century with confidence and enthusiasm. I am personally grateful."—EVAN C. FREY, Director of Annual Giving.

FOR PROGRESS AND ACCOMPLISHMENT

Only gifts and grants to meet current operating expenses are reflected in this report, for that is the express purpose of The Dickinson Fund. Gifts to the Six Million for Dickinson Campaign, special purpose gifts and gifts-in-kind will be recognized in a later publication.

The following symbols are used throughout the report: GMF (Gilbert Malcolm Fellow)-recognizes the donor of an annual gift in the amount of $100 or more; A (Agent)—recognizes those volunteers who actively assisted in the 1966 drive.

During the clerical operations involved in accurately listing the names of nearly 4500 contributors, it is only too likely that errors occurred. If you note a mistake, please inform the College so that the official records may be corrected.

THE Gilbert Malcolm Fellows of The Dickinson Fund was organized in July 1965 and announced to alumni, parents and friends in December of the same year.

A simple announcement, banded in Dickinson red, read as follows: "Whereas Dr. Gilbert 'Red' Malcolm returned to his alma mater to strengthen its financial resources, and whereas 'Red' Malcolm founded Annual Giving at Dickinson in 1934, it is fitting and thus resolved that his name be perpetually honored with the chartering of the Gilbert Malcolm Fellows. Recognizing those who can do the most toward achieving the increasingly higher goals of The Dickinson Fund with annual gifts of $100 or more, the Fellowship is designed to strengthen Dickinson in a unique way. We, the Dickinson Fund Committee, invite your consideration and participation in the life of Dickinson College as a Gilbert Malcolm Fellow."

In response to that invitation, two hundred sixty-

THE GILBERT MALCOLM FELLOWS

of THE DICKINSON FUND

This certifies that

John Doe, Class of 1980 has been designated a Gilbert Malcolm Fellow for seven alumni, parents and friends of the College, whose gifts ranged between $100 and $4,200, became Gilbert Malcolm Fellows for the academic year 1965–66. Their names appear on the honor roll with the letters GMF.

Howard d. Antendall

The Gilbert Malcolm Fellows at Dickinson evolved from a long study designed to evaluate 'biggift clubs' and their impact on Annual Giving at the small liberal arts college. Certainly Dickinson's initial experience has been favorable. We look for a continued good response to the Gilbert Malcolm Fellows in the years ahead.

ANDREW Y. ROGERS, JR. Class of 1965

Despite the handicap of serving in the armed forces during his first year as Class Chairman, Tony Rogers, '65, assisted by a handful of classmates, managed to lead his Class to a new record for "the most recent class to graduate." With many a sixty-fiver in graduate school and in Vietnam, 85 contributors joined in our alumni effort. Their first performance is a clear-cut challenge to the Class of 1966.

BUOYED by the success of Dickinson's College Bowl Team, and voicing approval of the educational program of the College, the Parents Annual Giving Fund soared 61 per cent to a record total of $23,339. While most of the 520 contributors have sons and daughters at Dickinson now, parents of past students are joining the effort in increasing numbers. This section is dedicated to those parents, grandparents and alumni-parents, who have given new strength to Dickinson.

Minutes of June 3, 1966 Alumni Council Meeting

President Howell C. Mette called the meeting to order at 8 P.M. in the Holland Union Building. Those present included:

Council Trustees

Mrs. Katherine Smith Carpenter, Weston C. Overholt, Jr., Roy R. Kuebler and Winfield C. Cook.

Council Members

Harry E. Hinebauch, George Lindsay, George C. Hering, III, Howard J. Maxwell, Virginia Watts, Robertson C. Cameron, Mrs. Helen Dickey Morris, Samuel J. McCartney, Rev. Ralph L. Minker, Jr., Rev. Kermit L. Lloyd, Douglas McPherson, G. Harold Keatley, Austin W. Brizendine, Catherine Eitemiller, John D. Hopper, Thomas V. Zug and Mrs. Kathryn C. Brougher.

Council Members Elect

Constance Klages, Fred A. Lumb and Robert E. Young.

President Mette welcomes President Rubendall and Trustee President Samuel W. Witwer as guests of the Council. They reported informally and briefly on the progress of the College, and the meeting of the Trustees. Expression of appreciation was made for the support of the Alumni Association.

Treasurer's Report

Dr. George Shuman, Treasurer of the Lemuel T. Appold Fund, reported as follows:

Balance, June 1965 Receipts 1965-66

$94,500.00

Balance, April 30, 1965 $95,802.50 He also called the attention of alumni to three "Lasts" at Dickinson:

- A. Destruction of the old heating plant marks the absolute end of the old gym;
- B. Tearing down of Baird Hall marks the last of Mooreland; and
- C. Razing of Conway to make way for the new library truly marks the end of an era!

COMMITTEE REPORTS Continuing Education

Robert E. Young, member of the Continuing Education Committee reported for Sidney D. Kline, Jr., chairman, on the Symposium held on Parents Weekend. Although the symposium was of the same high caliber as last year, low attendance and/or interest on the part of alumni raise the question of continuance of the program. The committee will "take a hard look" at the matter this year.

Alumni Events

The Alumni Events Committee reported as the outstanding event this year the Fraternity Symposium conducted on February 11 and 12 on the campus. George Hering, chairman of the committee, noted the complete report of this affair which the Spring ALUMNUS features in detail.

Alumni Trustee

Roy Kuebler, Alumni Trustee, reported on the day-long meeting of the Board of Trustees. His "gleanings" from the campus aroused keen interest and all Council members feel an ill-concealed eagerness to hear the sequel at the next Council meeting. His report on the state of the College was encouraging and reassuring, especially his indication that this was the first meeting in a long time when the Trustees were not meeting "in a period of crisis."

Annual Giving

Evan Frey, Director of the Dickinson Fund, reported that Dickinson College won Second Place in the 1966 Alumni Giving Incentive Awards Competition, sponsored by the American Alumni Council.

If this operates the way it has in the past, this also means that we placed first among all competing large (1,000 or more students) co-educational colleges and universities in the Nation. He reported gratifying progress for the 1966 Fund, although at this date our goal has not yet been achieved. (See report in this issue.)

Program, Practices and Policy Committee

George Lindsay, chairman, gave the long awaited report on the survey studied by the Program, Practices and Policy Committee. All Council members received a copy of the report by mail. A copy is also appended with these minutes in the Secretary's records.

NEW BUSINESS

A motion to circulate the report to the Association was supplanted by a motion to table the matter until the Council meets in the fall. Motion passed. In the meantime a special committee will give the report further study.

Officers 1966-67

John Hopper made the report of the Nominating Committee, proposing the following officers for 1966-67:

President Samuel J. McCartney Vice President Robertson C. Cameron Secretary

Mrs. Mary Mackie Eshelman

It was moved, seconded and passed that a unanimous ballot be cast for those nominees.

Following are the newly elected Council members (terms to expire 1969):

Fred A. Lumb, '29 Harry E. Hinebauch, '34 George G. Lindsay, '48 Hampton P. Corson, '49 George C. Hering, III, '53 Constance W. Klages, '56 Robert E. Young, '59 Bradley Geist, '66

Re-elected to the Board as Alumni Trustee was Roy Kuebler, '33.

Alumni College

The new president, Samuel McCartney, took the chair and asked Council for directions regarding the Alumni College (Continuing Education). After discussion it was agreed that the committee consider seriously a one-day program patterned loosely on the event held for area alumni last year: A seminar in the afternoon; fellowship and buffet supper; evening of entertainment. Last year there was a basketball game, for example. Briefly—a combination of information and entertainment was judged to hold the most attraction for alumni.

It was also suggested that this be held on some weekend—preferably after snow danger—when no other big program is scheduled.

Alumni Secretary

Vince Schafmeister, our peripatetic Alumni Secretary, reported that alumni affairs were staged during the year on 57 occasions. In line with his philosophy that we amplify off-campus relationships, Vince attended all but one of them! He expressed satisfaction that Council has now broadened its voting base to include all alumni who have indicated their interest in Dickinson by contributing to the Dickinson Fund during the current fiscal year.

The ALUMNUS now has a circulation of 11,500.

In the area of Placement, a service now rendered by the Alumni Office, a wider and wider use is being made of our service by recruiters, alumni and senior students.

Conferences and symposiums also were attended by our tireless Alumni Secretary. As a result of discussion in one of these conferences, Vince proposed that the PPP Committee seek answers to the following questions:

- What are the objectives of the General Alumni Association and what is the appropriate role of the GAA in the affairs of the College?
- 2. What channels of communication and relationship between the GAA and its officers, and the College, are required for the GAA to function most effectively?
- 3. What general areas of activity should be of prime concert to the GAA in view of its role and the needs of the College?

Another outgrowth of several conferences and data which Vince gathered from a representative group of his counterparts and development people in other institutions, and other sources, is a supplementary (or conflicting) report to that of the PPP committee—a capsule treatment of how it is around the country:

- Dues or annual contributions are a condition of voting members in Alumni Associations.
- 2. Life memberships are encouraged.
- 3. General administrative costs are subsidized by the College.
- 4. The Alumni Association Executive is selected by the College with approval of the Executive Committee of the General Alumni Association.
- 5. Less than 50% of alumni executives hold Cabinet rank but the trend is toward such appointment.
- Most alumni executives are subject to directions and orders from the President, his assistant, or an appropriate vice president.
- 7. Most alumni executives hold academic rank.
- Annual Giving is administered by a paid executive working in or with the alumni executive's office.
- Alumni Associations avoid seeking to restrict Annual Giving Funds to certain areas.

- 10. Alumni Associations have representation on Trustee Boards.
- 11. Terms of alumni trustees are at least equal in length to all other trustees.
- 12. Alumni trustees are afforded full opportunity to hold offices.
- Associations do not seek voice in determining admissions philosophy and policy.
- Boards of Athletic control, if established, include association representation.
- 15. Alumni are accepting, albeit however reluctantly, the fact that social behavior is in transition and are leaving this business to administrators.
- Most associations are fully responsible, except financially, for publication of the alumni periodical.
- Strangely, no attitude toward an association financed, or directed, sponsored or maintained Inn.

A gratifying rearrangement of the College table of organization was announced by Vince. He has been named to the President's Executive Cabinet, thus permitting a direct voice from alumni in administrative affairs of the College. The Washington Dickinson Club, Vince reported, was awarded a national honor this year by the American Alumni Council—one of four alumni service awards issued yearly, encompassing the nation. This citation recognized the work of the Washington Club with its tutoring project for underprivileged children.

His final award announcement—reported modestly, but with understandable pride and satisfaction—was his own award from Raven's Claw. The award established this year, to "honor one faculty-administrator and one student yearly, who without acclaim, have demonstrated outstanding and unselfish service to the College community. Their efforts exemplify a spirit which is vital to Dickinson," will be recorded annually on a plaque in the lounge of the Holland Union Building.

College Admission Policies

Dean David R. Jefferson, Director of Admissions, outlined to the Council, College admission policies in general—and policies relating to children of alumni. A question period furnished answers to a number of points with which council members and all alumni have been concerned. Strong encouragement was voiced for continuation of the policy of personal correspondence with all applicants.

Resolution

The following resolution proposed by George Lindsay was unanimously and enthusiastically adopted:

Whereas Howell C. Mette has rendered six years of dedicated, determined, devoted and distinguished service to Dickinson College and to its General Alumni Association, service as member and as President of the Alumni Council, be it and it is hereby RESOLVED that the grateful appreciation of the Alumni Council, for itself and for the General Alumni Association, is hereby tendered with respect, gratitude and large measure of personal affection.

Meeting adjourned 10:45 P.M.

Respectfully submitted, Kathryn Coulter Brougher Secretary

Commencement Speaker Insists Criticism is Valid Only Within Framework of Competence

Dr. John S. Badeau Urges Research to Document And Lay Bare Facts "Without Fear or Favor"

Protest marches and pronouncements on national and world affairs by college students and faculty are evidence of the university community's quest for "a critical role in our society," Dickinson graduates were told at their Commencement exercises, last June 5th.

Dr. John S. Badeau, former U. S. ambassador to the United Arab Republic and now Director of the Middle East Institute, Columbia University, said the university world has "unparalleled opportunity" for critical involvement in world affairs through research.

"With all the expressions of opinion from the university community on Vietnam during the past two years," he said, "there seems to be a strange dearth of research that documents and lays bare that tragic situation.

"And there will be other Vietnams in the future for which the university community should today be doing the research which can be the critical element in preventing future mistakes."

Declaring that research is based on conviction that facts are important, he said that "only as facts are discovered can sound judgements be made.

"With all the new and rapid developments of our society, our untried programs, our novel new suggestions, and pressures to keep development moving ahead, there is always the danger that facts will be neglected.

"Here the university world has an unparalleled opportunity to express its critical role by uncovering without fear or favor the facts that must be dealt with in new situations." Holding that criticism is valid only within the framework of competence, Dr. Badeau said he found it curious that much of the public criticism from the university world on current foreign policy comes from engineers, physicists, doctors and English teachers, while on the whole the voice of the historian, political scientist and teacher of international affairs has been much more restrained.

"The university must beware of the current myth that any criticism offered on public affairs by university staff or students is per se worthy of unusual consideration," he said. "For the university as for the layman, competence is the only framework in which criticism can be sound."

Dr. Badeau insisted that every citizen has a right to express an opinion but, he asked, "does he have a right to an opinion unless he knows at least the basic facts and has the competence to judge them?"

Dr. Howard L. Rubendall presided at the exercises and conferred an honorary degree upon Dr. Badeau and six other prominent persons. An overflow throng of 2,000 alumni, parents, relatives and friends of the class witnessed.

One of the 240 graduates was a totally blind student, Ronald E. Metenyi, of Falls Church, Va., who studies with the aid of recorders, Braille, and friends who read to him. He majored in philosophy and said his career choice is computer programming. Gentle pressure on Ronald's arm by a classmate was the only help needed for the blind senior to mount the platform to receive his diploma with the rest of the class.

Dean of the College, Dr. Samuel H. Magill and Dr. William R. Bowden, secretary of the faculty, assisted the president in conferring the baccalaureate degrees.

Heading the class as summa cum laude graduates were Ronald B. Tischler and Elizabeth A. Wagner. They received Phi Beta Kappa keys along with 16 other seniors who graduated magna cum laude.

The Hufstader Awards of $200.00 each, to the senior man and woman who rendered the greatest service to the College over the four years were given to Kenneth A. Bergstresser, Jr., and Nancy D. McAneny.

The Phi Beta Kappa recognition was made by Dr. William H. Wishmeyer, president of the Dickinson chapter of the nation's oldest scholarship fraternity.

The coveted James Fowler Rusling Prize and John Patton Memorial Prize, for general excellence in scholarship, were given to Susan H. Jagiello and Miss Wagner, respectively.

The honorary degree recipients and the persons who served as their sponsors, listed in parentheses, follow:

Rev. Gaither P. Warfield, '17, a Man for Others

A CHRISTIAN leader who has directed The Methodist Church's worldwide ministry of relief, rehabilitation and refugee resettlement for 14 years was acclaimed at a testimonial dinner in New York last spring.

Honored on his retirement as general secretary of the Methodist Committee for Overseas Relief (MCOR) was the Rev. Dr. Gaither P. Warfield, '17 who calls both Rockville, Maryland, and New York City home.

Almost 150 friends and co-workers gathered at the Riverside Church, just across the street from MCOR's head-quarters in the Interchurch Center, to fete Dr. Warfield at a dinner and a reception.

Bishops, including Methodism's 103-year-old senior statesman Bishop Herbert Welch, the founder of MCOR, church executives and ecumenical leaders lauded Dr. Warfield for his 20 years of service with MCOR, the last 14 as general secretary. They paid tribute to him as "a loyal Methodist, a man of infinite compassion, a Christian gentleman, a man of action, one of God's gifts to the church, and a man for others."

In recognition of his leading Methodism in providing millions of dollars to help suffering people around the world, victims of war, floods, hurricanes, earthquakes and persecution, one speaker said, "Thousands of people would like to step forward tonight and say, 'God bless you.'"

And there were gifts—a check representing the esteem of friends and professional colleagues; an etching from grateful Berliners; a carved wood panel from Hong Kong's refugees, and a finely wrought tablecloth from tuberculosis patients at India's Madar Sanatorium, who sent this message, "You remembered the needs of everybody."

The chairman of MCOR, Bishop Ralph T. Alton of the Wisconsin Area of The Methodist Church, summed it up when he said: "The last thing Gaither would want on this occasion would be for it to be too 'solemncholy.' So let me say just this, the work of MCOR and Gaither's compassionate and determined personality were made for each other. He personifies what is significant in the mission of the church."

Bishop Ralph T. Alton (left) presents a check to the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Gaither P. Warfield. The gift was presented at a testimonial dinner for Dr. Warfield, '17, in New York on the occasion of Dr. Warfield's retirement as general secretary of the Methodist Committee for Overseas Relief (MCOR). Bishop Alton, who heads the Wisconsin Methodist Area, is the chairman of MCOR.

Dr. Warfield was the third general secretary MCOR has had in its 26-year history. The first was Bishop Welch, and second was the late Bishop Titus Lowe. Dr. Warfield served as an MCOR staff member under both.

Dr. Warfield is a native of Rockville, Md. He also received an MA degree from Dickinson and was awarded a doctor of divinity degree in 1942 while he was interned in a European concentration camp. He also has degrees from Drew Theological Seminary, Madison, N. J., and Union Theological Seminary in New York.

During World War I, he was a war work secretary of the YMCA for six months and later was a pilot in the United States Army. He served as assistant pastor of St. Paul's Methodist Church in New York City and later was a traveling secretary of the Student Volunteer Movement in the United States.

DR. WARFIELD went to Poland in 1924 as a missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and soon was appointed superintendent of the Poznan District. He established and directed the training school for Methodist ministers in Poland, and at the outbreak of World War II was superintendent and treasurer of the Polish Methodist Church. Soon after the war began, in September 1939, he was arrested and imprisoned by the Soviet Army. Upon release he returned to Warsaw and organized the American colony. On December 7, 1941, he was arrested by the Germans and later taken to the internment camp at Laufen. The following year he was exchanged and returned to this country with his family.

Dr. Warfield has been a vice-chairman of Church World Service and a past chairman of its executive committee, and was for years a member of the administrative committee of the Division of Inter-church Aid, Refugee and World Service of the World Council of Churches. He is a member of the Virginia Conference of The Methodist Church.

Among Dr. Warfield's remarks were the following:

"Sometimes we wonder what we would do if we had our life to live over again. I would unhesitatingly choose again the life God has given me. It holds all that is meaningful—my family, my friends, my faith in an exciting God and a disturbing Christ, and a world full of needy people to be served.

"Sometimes in thinking of Vietnam and the future, I, like many, get discouraged. But the future belongs to the Lord of the living. I don't think God created the world for hopelessness. He has a plan, and the future belongs to it. Wherever we turn, there is something to discourage us, but when we turn to the Lord of the living, He brings hope of a kingdom coming in the hearts of men."
