To the Editor:

As a Dickinson alumnus and a student in his final year of professional school, I was distressed to learn that Dickinson is now prodding the liberal arts to focus greater attention on the exigencies of a Career. Rather than reveal to its students that employment after graduate school, such as law, or even after college is primarily based not upon grades or the prestige of one's alma mater but upon connections, politics, the singularity of one's background, such as majors in chemistry and physics, or the impressiveness of one's personality, Dickinson now initiates its students to kowtow at the altar of Careerism. And rather than publicize statistics which reveal fewer graduate school applications and less need for competitive pressure, Dickinson now panders to the cheapest fears of their students as well as their parents, that upon graduation little Harold will be left ill-prepared, or worse, unemployed.

Some people believe that career-oriented preparation is vital for professional school success. However, as a law student, I can testify that any deficiency in preparation—be it engineering for a course in patent law, accounting for federal taxation, or economics in anti-trust—is alleviated two weeks into the course.

Undoubtedly, members of the Dickinson community can discuss and defend the liberal arts with greater eloquence and authority than myself. I merely hope that Dickinson's romance with Careerism is as temporary as the economic conditions by which it was spawned.

Sincerely,
Robert N. Waxman, '73

This is a year for parades; just about every large and small city and town in the country is celebrating the Bicentennial with marching bands and elaborate floats. Carlisle is no exception. Its parade in May was so large it took hours to pass the reviewing stand.

In addition to being large, in a state where large parades are a habit, Carlisle's parade was unique. Quite probably no other parade in the country has included or will include an academic group marching in cap and gown. Thirteen members of the Dickinson College faculty and administration, wearing their academic robes and carrying the college mace and the college and American flags, were a noticeable addition to baton twirlers, pioneers in horse-drawn wagons, and volunteer firemen.

There was precedent, however. During Dickinson's early years the commencement procession also was a parade through town. The 1976 contingent was a different sort of group, infinitely less solemn than those early Dickinsonians must have been. The black-robed troupe waved to strangers jamming Carlisle's sidewalks and tipped mortar boards to acquaintances. It was greeted by surprised comments, "Why that's Dickinson," and by cheers and clapping. From less active colleagues seated at curbside there were commiserating smiles.

Hundreds of people took part in the more than three-hour parade. It is possible that these in the black robes enlivened by colorful velvets and satins had the clearest idea of what it was all about. They moaned and groaned before and after but in a serious moment at the dispersal area someone proposed a toast—and everyone seconded the idea—to 203 years of Dickinson and 200 of the Republic.

SPIRITUAL GROPINGS OF THE SIXTIES

NOTE: Personal references have been limited to persons who are no longer either students, faculty or administrative personnel at Dickinson. Countless other persons who played vital roles in the spiritual movements of the sixties on the Dickinson campus might, of course, have been included in the portrait.

by Ralph Slotten

At the beginning of the decade the Representative American Preachers series brought some of the greatest pulpiteers in the country to the required Tuesday morning chapel of Dickinson College. Martin Luther King, Jr. came in November, 1960; Eugene Carson Blake, then Stated Clerk of the United Presbyterian Church, soon to be elected to the highest post of the World Council of Churches, preached at Dickinson in September of '62; Rabbi Eisendrath, President of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, came in April of '63; and the line of notables is long. However, by September of '65 required chapel was no more and the voluntary Sunday morning College Church had taken its place as a "community of doubters," baptized in the flames of Robert Glazer's draft card which was publicly burned during the period of common concerns. Joseph Washington, Dickinson's aggressively innovative black Methodist chaplain, had wisely built an open period into the service as an outlet for the overflowing questionings and protests of this volatile generation. In the fall of '66 the Death of God theologians—Vahanian, Van Buren, and Altizer, brought by the newly created Faith and Society lectureship, the year following joined by Rabbi Rubenstein of After Auschwitz—proclaimed their eerie message to a New Dickinson which was already turning away from a barely awakened social conscience to follow the pied piper of a latter-day Hamelin into the exploration of sensory perception and consciousness-changing drugs.

The '60's had, indeed, begun with a flurry of social awakening, focused on racial relationships. Bruce Smith, of the Committee on Racial Integration, had edited a mimeographed sheet entitled the Campus CRI-er to represent this concern. A similar group called "Concern," an offshoot of the small Friends Meeting on campus, had been active from about '61 to '64. In the summer of '65 four Dickinson students participated in the Civil Rights Movement in the South. This tradition of social concern continued in the later '60's in the form of Project Africa, in the PEER program for the underprivileged children of Carlisle, in the extensive governance reorganization of Dickinson student life and, of course, in the annual Public Affairs Symposium which had been conceived by Samuel Magill, chaplain in '62-3 and afterward academic dean.

The late '60's was pandemonium. In '66 the counter-culture was represented on this straight, pre-professional, Greeklettered campus by the Fringe, grouped around a senior father-figure student and a mother-figure or two. By '69, a couple of years behind the rest of the country (Dickinson's 'Buchanan syndrome'), the campus was a sea of long hair and patched jeans and the fraternities huddled together for reassurance. Protest was centered in the moderate Marxist counsel of Larry Warner, popular young professor of political science, in the radical Marxism of the S.D.S., in the idealism of young professors Tony Gahn and Dan Crofts, the latter having burned his draft card at a Yale religious service in the presence of the fiery antiwar chaplain William Sloane Coffin. In the fall of '69 Russell Dondero, student and apostle of the Quaker political philosopher Mulford Sibley, unfurled his militantly peaceful banner of Gandhi-style revolution in the political science department, focusing his energies against the R.O.T.C. Conscientious objectors to the Vietnam War multiplied.

Orientalophilia struck in '68 and lasted until about 1970, after which it was slowly replaced by the Jesus Movement, which in turn was to drift, by the mid '70's, into its present charismatic phase. In the summer of '68 twelve Dickinson students, three faculty wives, and two faculty engaged in a summer travel seminar through India, studying Hindu temple architecture in relation to Indian religion and mythology. Interest in all things Indian and Eastern quickly spread throughout the campus. Philo-Buddhists and India-enthusiasts clustered around the Art, Philosophy, and Religion Departments. Korean Buddhist Abbot Seo was briefly on campus; the Hare Krishna people celebrated a kirtan in Memorial Hall; bedizened with oriental beads and electrically chanting 'om', Allan Ginzberg recited his 'howl' poetry to a packed crowd in the Social Hall. In '70 Prof. Sabin led a second summer-travel seminar to Patna, India, which prepared the way for the consortium-sponsored India Semester Program in Mysore.

Remarkably, the overwhelming gap between the professors and the students was bridged. President Rubendall and Associate Dean Allshouse made themselves champions of the students. Joe Washington, searching to find constructive channels of expression of student concerns, initiated the policy, subsequently continued by his successors, of making the chaplain's office a center for independents, liberals, iconoclasts, rebels of all sorts. Nevertheless, most of the religiously oriented faculty and administration were significantly to the theological right of the agitating element among the students.

For a brief period, in the middle and early later '60's, the College Church was the swirling focus of spiritual vitality of a small but significant portion of the faculty and students. Its first act was the founding of a campus coffee house. The coffee house singing group in turn became the chapel choir. In its first years the College Church was virtually Unitarian in its freedom from collective intellectual and worship commitments. Jewish as well as Christian students not only attended but also participated in the inner counsels of the College Church Committee. When one of the faculty participants objected because Chaplain Washington had introduced the practice of standing for the New Testament Lesson, but not for the Reading from the Old Testament, the ritual was altered to remove the implications of the superiority of the Christian revolution. There was an abundant appointment of readings from contemporary literature.

By '68 student spirituality was polarizing in two directions: one more radically secular, the other inclining toward non-Western mysticism. Meanwhile, the post-Washington college church leadership was quietly moving toward a more confessionally Christian and liturgical posture. The College Church played host to an Episcopalian jazz mass; in March of '69 the poet, W. H. Auden, a Freudo-Marxian of the Sonnenkind generation of the 20's and 30's who had converted to Christianity in 1940, preached to an overflowing congregation of worshippers and curiosity-seekers within the framework of an Episcopalian service of Morning Prayer. Nevertheless, the real strength of the church, as late as the early '70's, lay in its avowal of a social gospel. The latter led to its commitment to a housing project in which faculty families and students wielded hammers, saws, and paint brushes. The radical preaching of William Stringfellow and Andrew Young related liturgical renewal to prophetic Christianity.

By deliberate design, the Rubendall presidency broke the religious monopoly which at the beginning of the period had banned all other religious organizations from the campus and earlier led to a brief, comic-opera persecution of the Quakers. In the summer of '68 Durbin Oratory was transformed into the Inter-Faith Chapel; the preceding fall the Jewish community had celebrated its first high holy days on the campus and, through the cooperative effort of the chaplaincy and Prof. Alexander, weekly Jewish services began to be held. When, in '70, Judaic studies were introduced into the college curriculum, a solid base had been laid for the Jewish community in Carlisle, which is now organized as the Congregation Beit Tikvah ("House of Hope"). At the same time Fr. Pawelski became the first (part-time) Roman Catholic chaplain, celebrating, each Sunday evening, a lively folk-mass. In '69-'70 Sister Sara Butler became the first Roman Catholic to teach religion at this traditionally Methodist (and earlier, Presbyterian) college. Responding to the black student movement which developed in the late '60's, the religion department somewhat tardily instituted a course in Black Religion in America, first taught in '72.

The Inter-Faith Chapel symbolizes, and the new religion department curriculum, adopted by the faculty in '75, incorporates, the pluralistic religious vision which reshaped the New Dickinson of the 1960's. However, the New Dickinson spirit is something more than mere religious tolerance and pluralism. The Statement of Purpose of the College Church, composed by students, under the guidance of faculty sponsors, in '66, offers a permanent testimony to that spirit. "We, gathered from the Dickinson community", they wrote, "seek faith and the clarification of faith. Entrapped by doubt, we seek freedom to affirm. Ensnared in apathy, we seek courage to question. Immobile in our loneliness, we seek the power of community." The Statement continues with an attempt to define the nature of worship in an academic community. "In worship," declared these intense youth of the '60's, "we are confronted with the presence which invites us to move beyond ourselves. Here we acknowledge our fractured existence and rejoice in the renewing wholeness of God's grace. Amidst diversity of experience, we seek unity of expression. In this spirit we will risk our doubts by responding to a love which demands our personal engagement in the struggle for human dignity and social justice."

THE QUAD HAS A PROBLEM

At one time better than 80 percent of the male students at Dickinson College were members of fraternities and lived in fraternity housing located around the edge of the campus. Today the figure is less than 50 percent and this decline has created a housing—and social—problem.

In 1960 physical condition of the fraternity houses varied from fair to poor and some of the chapter organizations were being criticized by both the Department of Health for unsanitary kitchen facilities and the Department of Labor and Industry for general safety conditions. Recognizing this the Board of Trustees asked the consulting firm of Howell, Lewis, and Shay to study possible fraternity housing plans. In their study the consultants assumed that the College's enrollment would be "1,000 students until 1965 with a ratio on the order of two men to one woman ... and, that after 1965 eventual possible growth toward 1,500 students" would be accomplished by the administration. (The ratio of men to women is now 50-50; enrollment is 1630 and is expected to stay at that figure.)

The consultants identified a downward trend in the percentage of male undergraduates who were joining fraternities in the period from 1954 to 1960; however the number of students joining fraternities had actually increased due to an increase in undergraduate enrollment.

Eleven ways to alleviate the physical deficiencies were recommended, ranging from remodeling the ten private houses to building ten new dormitories. The Board chose to buy all fraternity properties and build new dorms because most of the fraternity houses were unable to meet the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry standards and most of the individual fraternity chapters were unable to raise the necessary funds to repair or renovate to meet state regulations. In order to secure long-term financing the College increased the proposed dormitory capacity of the quadrangle from 350 to 400 students and in 1964 and 1972 further raised the housing capacity to 460 students in two steps.

In 1962 all the existing fraternity houses were purchased by the College and each alumni fraternity chapter was paid 25 percent of the purchase price at settlement. The purchase prices had been established by averaging the assessments of a college-appointed appraiser, a fraternity-appointed appraiser, and the county tax assessor. Each fraternity paid the College $10,000 at settlement to have the new complex modified to include more social space and the College became the Trustee for the remaining funds which are utilized as annual scholarships. The College gave the right of first assignment of rooms in individual fraternity dorms to the local chapter but retained the right to fill any vacant beds with non-fraternity upperclassmen.

Campus studies indicate that there never were nor will there probably ever be enough fraternity men to occupy the quadrangle at its present 460 housing capacity.

Since the facility was built, the number of freshmen pledging fraternities has remained relatively constant while male enrollment has increased, resulting in a decrease in the percentage of fraternity membership. Less than half of the freshman men now pledge fraternities. The College has been housing independent men in the quadrangle since its completion and the number of independent men assigned there has exceeded 140 students for each of the last five years.

Although the relationship between fraternity students, independent students, and the College has been fairly cordial, tensions and stress have been present. It must be remembered that unless they find rooms in Carlisle, or the McKenney and Kisner-Woodward buildings, independents have little choice but to live in the quadrangle even though they decided not to join fraternities. The tensions created by this housing situation have been present for more than 10 years, have gotten no better, and during the past school year reached a peak. Independent students don't particularly want to live in fraternity houses and the fraternity men don't really want them there. This spring the situation reached an ugly, even dangerous, stage culminating in acts of violence and vandalism.

The College has a sizeable financial investment in the fraternity quadrangle. Construction bonds will not be paid off for many years and thus room rents from the quadrangle are critical. The College must continue to fill its beds. But, the quadrangle situation is making that difficult. Students who are dissatisfied with having no alternatives in their living situation are transferring away from Dickinson. Some prospective students who visit the campus are turned off by the problem and either do not apply or do not come after being accepted.

President Banks in the fall appointed a Task Force to look at all aspects of Dickinson's social and residential life. Fraternity and independent students, faculty members, trustees, administrators, and alumni are members. The quadrangle situation is under study by a sub-committee on college-fraternity relations which is to present a proposal to the Student Affairs and Institutional Priorities and Resources Committees and the president's senior staff for study and recommendations. As a result of these and other hearings, the president will consider all data and recommend action to the Board of Trustees through its appropriate committees. Action is anticipated at the October 22 meeting of the Board.

THE GROWING VOICE OF DICKINSON COLLEGE RADIO

by Neal Lipsitz '77

Licensed to the Trustees of Dickinson College, WDCV-FM is currently one of the largest student-run organizations on campus. The station has grown tremendously since it inhabited the top floor of the gray stone music building at the corner of College and Louthier Streets.

During the early sixties, the voice of WDCV-AM could be heard within three dormitories, Adams, Drayer, and Morgan Hall. The transmitting system, known as carrier current, restricted WDCV's sound within the walls of each dormitory. One step outside the dorm and one lost touch with Dickinson radio. The carrier current system grew, however, and as more transmitters were installed, more and more students were listening to the contemporary sound of Dickinson College.

In 1968, with the completion of the Holland Union, WDCV moved from its egg-carton lined studios in the music building. The station suddenly found itself contained in its own air and production studios, newsroom and offices, within clear view of all Dickinson students. At the same time the remainder of the residence halls on campus were outfitted with transmitters and everyone from Adams to the fraternity quadrangle could switch on WDCV. Operating with a small but energetic staff WDCV expanded both sides of its broadcasting day from 10 am - 12:00 midnight to 7 am - 2 am. The student body was surveyed to determine their musical tastes and what they wanted to hear from their college station. The format was contemporary, playing the popular jingles. WDCV's top 100 songs were listed weekly. When disc jockeys could not be scheduled the signal from WGAL in Lancaster was piped through Dickinson's transmitters. WDCV's own 15-minute newscast could be heard twice a day consisting of news from local newspapers and from WGAL, an NBC sub-affiliate.

During the late sixties WDCV continued to grow, capturing its highest campus audience ever and developing for itself a highly reputable standing among the college community. Each 15-minute newscast was extended to 30 minutes. By 1969 the United Press International teletype had found its way into WDCV's newsroom. During the evening hours jazz, soft rock, and instrumental works were incorporated into the station's format. By 1971 the ABC network line was installed and WDCV offered live actualities during news coverage.

Amid all of this growth, however, a problem developed, one that was to change the entire image of radio at Dickinson. A complaint was filed with the Federal Communications Commission against WDCV. Apparently the signal being broadcast was leaking outside the structural boundaries of some of the dormitories and was extending into the town. This problem was to become the impetus for WDCV's application to the FCC for an FM license. Through vigorous student effort, along with faculty and administrative cooperation, the radio station submitted its application. With an FM station, Dickinson College would be able to broadcast to the entire campus and within a five mile radius through the Cumberland Valley with only one transmitter. In August of 1973, WDCV received approval from the FCC for a ten-watt educational station broadcasting at 88.3 FM, licensed to the Trustees of the college.

With educational FM status came changes in programming to fulfill the requirements of the FCC. The hours from 7:30 to 10:00 pm were set aside for special programming. Pre-recorded tapes of various educational and music shows were obtained and aired. By this time the news staff began regular coverage of special campus events, the Public Affairs Symposia, elections, and other affairs of the college community. With FM, the contemporary format of the sixties was changed to a progressive one. All types of music were played including jazz, classical, folk, rock, and soul. In addition, progressive meant that new releases were to receive the most airplay with less emphasis on the already popular tunes. With an increase in progressive programming WDCV-FM developed the image of "alternative" radio. An alternative to the top 40 and country formats of Carlisle's local radio stations.

Today WDCV-FM involves nearly 100 students, total air time is quickly approaching twenty-four hours daily, and the equipment in use is some of the finest at any college radio station in the country. Special weekly programming includes a student-produced educational classical music show (Michael Kaplan), an hour of insight into jazz keyboard with one of the faculty (Truman Bullard), an hour-long survey of significant new releases with WDCV's music director (Ed Ross), British comedy and radio plays, plus a radio serial, special weekly sports wrap-up, pre-recorded music programs, and Campus Forum, in-depth interviews of campus personalities. The regular programming schedule includes all types of music, two half-hour extended news reports daily and a daily midnight spotlight to play various new releases in their entirety. In addition, live coverage of special campus events still takes priority over regular programming.

Since the beginning WDCV has been a viable extra-curricular experience for the Dickinson community. As growth continues, the station discovers new involvement and new challenges. Recently, the record library has become so large that the air studio will soon no longer be able to hold it all. In addition, with more and more students involved, increased space becomes necessary. Plans are currently being discussed to enable WDCV to become stereo. With the great road ahead and continued student participation Dickinson radio will surely continue to serve the college community at increasingly higher standards. The future looks very bright.

The College

THE PRESIDENT

President Sam A. Banks received an honorary doctor of letters degree from the College of Charleston in March. At a Founder's Day convocation, the South Carolina institution honored colleges founded in the Colonial period.

This spring Dr. Banks also took part in the Bicentennial Symposium of the Cumberland County Historical Society arranged to recall the county's contribution to the American Revolution.

The Health of a Rural County: Perspectives and Problems has been published by the University Presses of Florida. One of the editors and primary authors is Sam A. Banks. With Richard C. Reynolds, M.D. and Alice H. Humphries, M.A., Dr. Banks has written of the successful establishment of a health program in a rural community in Florida. The program has become an integral part of the University of Florida College of Medicine.

A recent issue of Parameters, the journal of the U.S. Army War College, included an article by Dr. Banks, "The National Purpose: Conflict and Creativity." The article developed from a talk the president made at the War College. Parameters is a forum for thought on national and international affairs, history, strategy, leadership and management and also is a vehicle for continuing the education of War College graduates and other officers and civilians concerned with military affairs.

TRUSTEES

At its spring meeting the Board of Trustees elected three new members: Samuel W. Witwer, Jr., three-year term; Thomas V. Zug, four-year term; Dr. John H. Harris, Jr., alumni trustee.

Mr. Witwer, son of the Board's president, is a partner in the law firm of Witwer, Moran, Burlage and Atkinson. He is a 1963 graduate of the College and received his law degree from the University of Michigan Law School. The new trustee is a member of the Methodist Bar Association and the Dickinson College Alumni Council.

A 1933 graduate, Thomas Zug received his law degree from Temple University. He was trust officer and assistant vice president of Provident National Bank until his appointment as vice president in 1968. He retired in 1973. Mr. Zug is a member of the Philadelphia and Pennsylvania Bar Associations.

The alumni trustee is a 1948 graduate of the College. He is a member of Harris, Rotz and Associates, Carlisle Hospital. Dr. Harris is a radiologist at Carlisle Hospital, Dunham Army Hospital at the U.S. Army War College, and is on the medical faculties of Thomas Jefferson University and the Milton S. Hershey Medical Center.

Board President Witwer was speaker at the 119th commencement of the John Marshall Law School in Chicago and received an honorary doctor of laws degree at the same ceremony. The degree citation referred to the Dickinsonian as a "distinguished lawyer, renowned legal scholar, college board president, humanitarian and public spirited citizen who through his tireless and fearless efforts provided inspirational leadership for constitutional reform in the State of Illinois and as president of the Sixth Illinois Constitutional Convention was the guiding force which led to the adoption of a modern constitution by the people of the State of Illinois."

On July 4 Dr. Witwer gave the Bicentennial sermon at the Chicago Temple, United Methodist Church.

THE FACULTY

Dr. Frederick A. Ferré, professor of psychology, has been elected president of the American Theological Society, an organization of leading theologians in North America. The Charles A. Dana

Thomas V. Zug

Samuel W. Witwer, Jr.

John H. Harris, Jr.

Professor of Philosophy at 43 is the youngest person ever elected to head the organization in its 64-year history. Ferre's predecessors as president have included Reinhold Neibuhr, Paul Tillich, and his father, Nels F. S. Ferré. The Dickinson professor is the author of several books, numerous articles and lectures frequently. This spring his newest book, Shaping the Future, was published. He is best known for his work in the logic of religion and science.

Paul J. Biebel, professor of biology, is among an international list of contributors to a new text, The Genetics of Algae, published simultaneously in London and the U.S. in May. Edited by Ralph Lewin of the Scripps Institution of Oceanography, the volume brings together the works of leading scientists. Professor Biebel has been studying the genetics of a particular strain of algae, Zygnematales, for 20 years. He feels that the single cell plants may be uniquely suited for solving some of the problems of inheritance.

Some years ago Dr. Biebel presented his findings at the first International Desmid Symposium in Germany and he will be on leave this fall to plan the second Desmid Symposium, scheduled in October.

Dr. Joseph Schiffman, professor of English, was named Alumnus of the Year by Long Island University Alumni Association this spring. The Tristram Walker Metcalfe Award for 1976 was presented to Dr. Schiffman during ceremonies May 21. A native of New York City, the professor received his undergraduate degree from Long Island and began his teaching career there. He at one time coordinated the university's Graduate American Studies Program.

The Board of Trustees promoted three members of the faculty this spring: associate professor Enrique J. Martínez-Vidal was made professor of romance languages while assistant professors Philip D. Nicoll and S. Ned Rosenbaum were promoted to associate professor of political science and associate professor of religion and classics, respectively. Both Nicoll and Rosenbaum received tenure.

Dr. Eugene J. Rosi and Dr. Philip D. Nicoll are taking a year's leave to participate in The American Council on Education's leadership development program. Dr. Rosi, professor of political science and coordinator of long-range planning, will be one of four Presidential Interchange Executives. Only four academic administrators were chosen for on-the-job experience with Federal agencies in this program. Professor Nicoll, also a political scientist, will be one of about 30 faculty members appointed to policy-level positions in the federal government.

NISBET INFORMATION

Two Nisbet descendants interested in and supportive of the College have died within the year and the College has received a collection of papers from another of the first president's descendants.

Katharine Kingsbury Chase (Mrs. William Rowell Chase of Cincinnati, Ohio) died Thanksgiving Day, 1975. She was the great-great-great-granddaughter of Charles Nisbet through Nisbet's daughter Alison McCoskry and also is the great-great-granddaughter of the fifth Dickinson president, John Mitchell Mason. Mrs. Chase is survived by her husband and two children, Roswell, Jr. and Alison Mason Chase.

Henry Rutherford Turnbull was the great-great-great-grandson of Nisbet through his eldest daughter, Mary Nisbet Turnbull. Mr. Turnbull, who died January 17, 1976, is survived by his widow, Virginia Butler Turnbull, and three children, H. Rutherford, III, John Grason, and Virginia. Mr. Turnbull was active in the advertising business in New York City prior to retiring to Ft. Lauderdale, Florida, where he died. Mr. Turnbull was the College's guest of honor at the initial celebration of Dickinson's bicentennial year at Fraunces Tavern in New York City, March 3, 1972.

Both Mrs. Chase and Mr. Turnbull were present with other Nisbet descendants at the dedication of the Charles Nisbet campus in September 1972. And they were among the initial sponsors of the Charles Nisbet Memorial Scholarship.

Mrs. Louise Sisk, a great-great-great-granddaughter of the first president through Nisbet's daughter Mary whose son married Alexander Nisbet's daughter (Alexander was Nisbet's young son), has presented a significant collection of Nisbet papers to the College. These include a Benjamin Rush letter about the College to Nisbet (1784), three letters written by Nisbet, about 20 other 18th century letters from Scottish friends and family members, and other memorabilia. Mrs. Sisk had some years ago presented the College with other Nisbet letters. This new material strengthens the collection related to Dickinson's first president.

COACH DIES

Edward G. Hays, for 27 years coach of the College's tennis team, died in March. Mr. Hays was chairman of the board of the Frog, Switch and Manufacturing Company in Carlisle and was president and general manager of the company from 1951 to 1971. He had been associated with the company since graduation from Yale University.

Mr. Hays was a former director of the Commonwealth National Bank and the Carlisle Hospital. He was a member of the Loyal Legion, the Carlisle Elks, and the Dickinson College 25 Year Club. Surviving are his wife, Jeanette Burgyes Hays '31; a son, Raphael Hays, II '56; two daughters, two sisters, and five grandchildren.

THE QUALITY OF TEACHING

A relatively small liberal arts college of any stature must have a strong faculty, good facilities, adequate endowment, and a curriculum which meets the future while retaining strengths of the past. Such a college encourages its faculty to write and conduct research. What really distinguishes this kind of college, though, is the quality of its teaching.

Dickinson, for example, does more than cite low student-faculty ratios, rapport between students and their teachers, opportunities for informal relationships—an almost personalized education. At Dickinson the quality of teaching is very seriously watched over, studied, improved.

There is the observer program where faculty members submit to observation by specially-trained students, an informal brown-bag group meets weekly over lunch to talk about teaching, and a number of faculty take advantage of the Teaching Workshop conducted by the Pennsylvania Consortium. Out of all this comes a teacher who inspires, who encourages students to do original research, who brings a sense of fun to education.

Howard C. Long, professor of physics-astronomy and holder of the Joseph Prestley Chair of Natural Philosophy, was named 1976 winner of the Lindback Award for Distinguished Teaching. The honor, highest the college can bestow upon a faculty member, was announced at the annual faculty-trustee dinner in May. The Lindback recipient is selected by a ballot of fellow faculty members. Dr. Long is a graduate of Northwestern University, Phi Beta Kappa. He received his Ph.D. from Ohio State University.

In the citation read by Dr. Banks, Dr. Long was hailed as one who has taught students to "appreciate the beauty of knowledge." The citation also mentioned his care for students' intellectual development, "his sacrifice of time and personal convenience to assist them . . ."

The Gano Award was presented to William B. Jeffries, professor of biology, by the senior class at commencement. This award, decided by secret ballot among the seniors immediately prior to graduation, goes to "the most inspirational teacher during their college career." In 1965 Professor Jeffries received the Lindback Award.

Dr. Jeffries is a graduate of the University of Pittsburgh and received the M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of North Carolina. Dr. Jeffries has conducted research with the department of bio-chemistry at the University of Miami School of Medicine under a fellowship from the National Institute of Health and more recently did some work at the Hershey Medical Center. He reported on his work at the Fourth International Prozoology Congress in France.

Dr. Lonna Malmshemer, assistant professor of American Studies and director of the program, decided to have an informal get-together this spring of students and faculty involved in the program. During the evening Professor Malmshemer gave a series of awards which poke fun at the trials and tribulations of students and the new director during the term.

One student got an award for Valor in the Face of the Director for persisting "in total disarray for nearly eight months, a disarray which has been remedied." The Valor in Defense of the Program award went to a student who during the Presidential Program Review managed to say, "Er-ahr I'm interested in the arts and humanities" as his reason for being in the program. The choices for the award for the Most Significant (confused?) Sentence in a Term Paper Performance were particularly good. One candidate had written, "in contrast to her front, Ellen's backstage acts in direct relation to her front and semi-backstage roles." The winner wrote, "Mae West as Mae West is Mae West."

In the regular class evaluation one student wrote, "The instructor should be more careful about who she lets into class," when asked what could be done to improve the class. Other students won awards for helping set up the new American Studies Lounge in Denny Hall after a raid on Harrisburg Goodwill Industries.

And then the students turned the tables on Professor Malmshemer and gave an Award of Excellence to The Director. It had four categories including an Award of Endurance: for success as a Rookie at "the Prep" and an Award of Valor "in the face of crummy grammar and lousy writing . . ."

Professor Neil Wolf and a group of students have been doing research in plasma physics, the largest plasma physics experiment at the undergraduate level in the country. No other undergraduate school, Professor Wolf says, does research like this.

Plasmas are 99.9 percent of the whole universe, the stars and what is between them. Only small rocks, like the earth and other planets, are not plasmas. One motivation to study plasmas, therefore, is to understand the universe. Another motivation, and the underlying idea of the Dickinson research, is to develop another electrical power source.

Gas heated electrically to high temperatures will ionize—the atoms are torn apart and then the gas starts to glow, to quote the physicist. Neon lights he mentions as an example of plasmas at work. The Dickinson experiments attempt to understand what happens to gases at high temperatures. So far scientists have not been able to heat up gas to a few hundred million degrees and then contain it long enough to harness the power. Dickinson students have been ionizing gas to a few hundred thousand degrees in order to see what happens to it in a strong magnetic bottle. They use helium gas, which is convenient and clean, and contain it in an evacuated glass tube. They ionize the helium with 1000 volts.

Once the helium is ionized the students start an electric magnet to increase the magnetic field. This squeezes the gas down to the center of the tube until a certain critical value of the magnetic field and then, according to two students this spring, "all hell breaks loose." The gas no longer behaves like a gas; it develops a rigid spiral structure, a helical spiral, and starts to oscillate and give off oscillating light.

The students are trying to understand this oscillation in plasma in strong magnetic fields and have gone about as far as they can in this phase of the research. They have found that their tube may not be long enough since the end of the tube is affecting the experiments. They think that it would be interesting to see what would happen with a longer magnetic field. The students think, though, that there are other experiments along similar lines which can be done to further study plasma, such as sound wave and microwave propagation in the plasma.

Professor Wolf, who came to the College in 1967 has done research at Stevens Institute of Technology, Dewey Space Physics, Princeton Plasma Physics Lab, and the University of Maryland. The Dickinson experiments have been aided by grants from AEC, NSF, and Research Corp. Much of the equipment came from government excess property and Professor Wolf says that Dr. Howard Long did the paper work to get it all started.

The experiments started with discharges related to fluorescent tubes. Students now are studying instabilities, oscillations, and unwanted behavior which prevents the attainment of high temperatures. They have studied different types of plasma and have tried to control it. Temperatures of a few hundred thousand degrees is lower than what is needed for fusion. But Professor Wolf says that at lower temperatures students can better control the experimental conditions. The hope is that by learning about plasma at lower temperatures they can understand the physical theory of plasma. When the theory is understood, scientists can use it to explain what happens at higher temperatures. Professor Wolf says that this is typical of all pure research: work on easily controlled situations and hope to develop general theories.

The plasma project has been going on for more than five years. Physics students who have worked on it include: Thomas W. Crocker '69, Stephen C. Germany '70, Steven A. French '71, Neal B. Abraham '72, Alexander Cavalli '72, Roger L. Fidler '72, Larry D. Bustard '73, Christina Johnson '73, David B. Sanders '73, and this year, Wes Cobb and Richard Deveney.

Wes and Richard say they first tried to understand what the others had done, and used their work as a foundation. They have been improving techniques for taking data and certifying results. Many of the students from the project have given research papers at the Central Pennsylvania section of the American Association of Physics Teachers, as Cobb and Deveney did in April. Professor Wolf has given papers at the national meetings of the American Physical Society, the national research organization of physicists.

Several of the students involved in the plasma project have gone on to graduate school: in plasma physics—Larry Bustard, Cornell and Sandy Cavalli, Dartmouth; in physics education, Neal Abraham, Bryn Mawr; in acoustics, Wes Cobb, University of Texas; in nuclear engineering, Richard Deveney, University of Virginia. Also in graduate school are Steven French at University of Virginia and Chris Johnson at Dartmouth. Chris, by the way, married Sandy Cavalli whom she met in the physics lab.

Richard and Wes study the magnetic bottle which is central to the plasma project.

SPRING — A WINNING SEASON

Just before the spring sport season got underway, junior swimmer Clyde Vedder had some winter sport business to finish. And he finished in style by swimming the 100-yard butterfly in 52.239 to take first place in the national NCAA Division III championships held late in March at Washington and Jefferson College.

Vedder's romp, which established a W & J pool record in the process, made him the first Dickinson swimmer ever to win a national title. The York student followed his 100-yard performance with a ninth place finish in the 200-yard butterfly which gave him All-American status in both events. Vedder, who has accumulated five school records in his three years of varsity competition, also gained All-American honors as a sophomore with 11th and 12th place finishes in the same events.

Led by a record-setting 17-1 golf team, the College's seven intercollegiate spring sport teams racked up an overall 55 and 35 record, the best in recent years. Only the men's lacrosse team suffered a losing season.

Coach Don Seibert's golfers set all-time standards for most wins in a season and the most consecutive wins (12) in a season. Seibert claims "depth" as the key to the team's success. Less than four strokes separated the first and seventh men among the squad for medal play.

Bill Honan, Moorestown, N.J. junior, led the pack with a 78.6 average on the season. Seibert's record as golf coach over 16 seasons is now 147 wins and 55 losses.

After compiling a so-so 6-6 record through the regular season, coach Joe DuCharme's track charges came up with a surprising fourth place finish out of the 19 teams competing in the Middle Atlantic Conference championships.

Two Red Devil champions were crowned during the two-day event which was hosted by Dickinson for the seventh straight year. Junior Tom Burkholder, Hatboro, won the long jump with a leap of 21' 6¼", and senior George Edson, Wrightstown, N.J., captured honors in the javelin with a toss of 192' 5". Red Devils also placed in the

NEW COACH

Win or lose, the 1976-77 basketball season will be of special interest to alumni.

Paul Seybold, former assistant and JV coach, will be acting head coach during Dave Watkins' one year sabbatical leave. He will be assisted by Gene Evans, a 1949 alumnus. A native of Plymouth, Evans opened his coaching career in

Paul Seybold

Sophomore Ann Caldwell, already a success in two women's varsity sports, tried her hand at tennis for the first time at Dickinson and completed the season with a perfect 9-0 record at fourth singles.

Only two of the young Harrisburger's matches required three sets and she came from behind to win both. Caldwell has been a top scorer in women's field hockey and basketball in her first two years at the College. As a freshman she was the basketball team's high scorer and was named most valuable player.

The women's lacrosse team in its initial season of intercollegiate play did something few other teams in that situation have ever done — namely, produce a winning record.

The Devilette stickers came up with a 5-3 record in their first season, losing only to Kutztown State, Bucknell, and powerful Gettysburg. The losses to Kutztown and Bucknell were each by a point. The team's only firm loss was 10-5 to Gettysburg.

basketball at Carlisle High School and was there from 1950-62. He was head basketball coach at Bucknell University from 1962-64, assistant football coach at the University of Pennsylvania, 1964-68, and basketball coach of Hazleton High School during the 1968-69 season before returning to Carlisle High School.

Several months ago Evans resigned his post as coach at Carlisle High but will remain as a member of the faculty. Evans received an M.A. from Bucknell and an M.S. from the University of Michigan.

DICKINSONIANS IN THE NEWS

And Learn Nothing

Dr. Claude C. Bowman '28, who retired this spring as professor of sociology at Temple University, was quoted in the Philadelphia Inquirer's Op-ed Page from a speech he made to Temple students being inducted into Phi Beta Kappa. Under the heading, "You can earn a diploma and learn nothing," Dr. Bowman said, "Higher education has been losing altitude at an alarming rate. For some years now I have watched the steady descent with concern verging upon dismay..." Dr. Bowman went on to discuss reasons for the decline and some of the positive changes which have taken place. He called for raising admissions and achievement standards. The professor then continued, "I can do little more than state the conviction that it is time for a comprehensive re-examination of higher education... Philosophical considerations seldom dictate a new, hard look at the status quo—it is the practical situation that is more compelling. Higher education is now enmeshed in what sociologists call 'cultural lag;' new conditions have come into being but old beliefs and practices still persist..."

Racing Novice

Lynda Ferreri '65 this spring purchased a Grand National racer to be used in the World 600 stock car races in North Carolina. The 32-year-old bank executive had never seen a major automobile race before she made the purchase. And she bought the car so that Janet Guthrie, the woman who failed to make the field at the Indianapolis 500, could take a crack at stock car racing. The new stock car owner is vice president for advertising and promotions at First Union National Bank in Charlotte, North Carolina. She worked oil company contracts and race merchandising for a promotion firm in New York City before going to Charlotte six years ago.

New Book

William Stringfellow LHD '70 has written, with Anthony Towne, The Death and Life of Bishop Pike, published this summer by Doubleday. The book has been called "An utterly candid biography of America's most controversial clergyman."

Some of the more than 80 women who attended Crossroads for Women: A Seminar wait for the next session to begin. The program in continuing education was a one-day seminar focusing on personal financial management, estate planning, wills, ERA, divorce, etc., and approaching work without career experience.

Carlisle Indians

The Coach of the Carlisle Indian team, Glenn S. (Pop) Warner, had a habit of inviting area colleges in for a warm-up game in mid-week. The college teams generally were roundly defeated. But, according to The Best of the Athletic Boys, "Another warm-up opponent, Dickinson College, was not as easily intimidated by the Indians. The Dickinson players were led by a gritty 165-pound quarterback, Hyman Goldstein (1915), who was determined to prove to the local people that they could also football at the other end of town. Carlisle won, 17-0, but the game was scoreless at the half and it was a much more physical afternoon than the Indians expected. Goldstein was able to stop Thorpe each time they met, one-on-one, a point of pride with the little quarterback." Written by Jack Newcombe, the book describes the white man's impact on Thorpe.

Thorpe and Goldstein developed a mutual respect and met often in Wednesday scrimmages where Warner tried out new plays under game conditions. "Those scrimmages at Indian Field were battles," Goldstein is quoted as saying. The book says that Goldstein at safety, "was a fearless, puzzling returner of kicks (Thorpe called him 'the trickiest I ever saw') and he gave the Indians a workout in bringing him down." Goldstein still practices law in Carlisle.

White House Post

William M. Diefenderfer '67 has been chosen consultant to the White House Domestic Council in the area of Labor, Education, and Veterans Affairs. He expects to be named assistant director of the council. Prior to the new appointment, Diefenderfer was staff attorney for the Committee on Education and Labor for the House of Representatives. He received his law degree at Duquesne University and was awarded a further degree in international trade law from the University of London.

Law Review

Joe Nacrelli graduated from Dickinson in 1925, studied law for three years at George Washington University and then opened a practice in Washington, D.C. A friend's son had flunked the bar exam and asked for Nacrelli's help. Soon he was helping seven young men prep for the exam. All seven passed. Then 14 more asked for help and 13 passed. He thought he was finished and then 39 more wanted to study with him; 36 of them passed.

While his method was still being defined and refined, Nacrelli continued to practice law. Finally in 1948 he decided to devote full time to teaching. Now his school is at American University and has been expanded to include preparations for the Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania bars. Some 25,000 law students have gone through the Nacrelli Bar Review School—and about 23,000 of them are practicing law.

Power of Prayer

Dr. Edward G. Brame, Jr. '48, chemist and internationally known spectroscopist, retains the healthy skepticism of the scientist, but says he has seen the power of prayer work, and measured it. A spectroscopist at the DuPont Co. Experimental Station, he uses the color spectrum to study the structures of various materials. He has discovered to his satisfaction that lengthy group prayer over ordinary water breaks down the molecular bonds that hold a group of H₂O molecules together and produces a simpler kind of water composed of single molecules which, he believes, is healthier to drink. Brame says the effect is similar to the established method of breaking water bonds with magnetism.

In addition to his work for DuPont, Brame is editor of the International Journal of Spectroscopy and editor-in-chief of a forthcoming series of books entitled Practical Spectroscopy. After hours and on weekends he is a parapsychologist who has found to his astonishment that prayer can alter the molecular structure of water.

Clinic for the Soul

There is a new service at the Geisinger Medical Center in Danville that the hospital refers to as a clinic for the soul. Providing this service is the Rev. Allan Lumpkin '62. While Chaplain Lumpkin is neither a physician, psychologist, or educator, he complements what these people do and acts as an extension of other hospital personnel. The chaplain is often referred to patients by physicians and nurses; he conducts "general rounds" in intensive care areas; he assists in spiritual therapy; and he often becomes a resource for a patient's pastor.

member of ROTC, the Pershing Rifles Drill Team, and the Rangers Club. Carol had been planning to major in international studies and German at Dickinson and plans to stick with the same major at West Point.

Labor Relations

A recent issue of Pennsylvania, The Magazine of Local Governments, featured an article by Richard K. Evans '50. The title is "Act III is in Trouble" and the article concerns a law authorizing collective bargaining and requiring arbitration. Evans, who also has studied at the University of Pennsylvania, is a labor relations specialist in the government.

Indoor Golf

Bob Weinreb and Wasyl Bojczuk, both '75, don't care if it is raining when they want to play golf. They have opened a miniature golf course on the second floor of a former book warehouse in Carlisle. The two were roommates at college and played football. First they opened a pinball and pool table emporium on the first floor of the warehouse. They added the miniature golf course because, as they said, "We hadn't seen any of them around."

Marshall Scholar

Gail Ann Rickert '74 was Dickinson's first Marshall Scholar and studied at Oxford University. Now she has received a $3,000 Harvard Fellowship, renewable annually, for three years work. Working toward a doctorate, Gail is continuing studies first undertaken at Oxford in classical philosophy.
