THE WEATHERVANE

This fall the number of Sunday papers arriving at 49 West Street in Carlisle increased considerably. 49 West, as you know, is the building which houses Dickinson's communications and development department—development, public relations, alumni relations, publicity, annual fund, publications.

Primarily the alumni office, although actually the entire building is involved, has invited students to drop by for donuts, coffee, and a look at Sunday newspapers. The papers early in the fall were representative of the mid-Atlantic states. As the year continues, foreign language papers from exotic parts of the world and papers from other sections of this country are beginning to make an appearance.

With mild and sunny weather, students spread themselves and the papers on 49 West's front porch. There generally is a rush for the sports pages and the "New York Times" crossword puzzle has a number of fans. Comic sections are shared as a particularly good Doonesbury or Peanuts strikes someone's funny bone. It's an informal sort of morning with fluctuating attendance.

There really isn't any other way for students to get hold of an array of Sunday papers, short of going to downtown Carlisle themselves or ordering foreign papers by mail. With newspapers like the "Times" selling for $1.00 not many students make the effort. But they don't mind strolling across the campus with a couple of friends. One Sunday a resident of Carlisle, who had seen a notice in the Union, arrived to join the readers.

There is, of course, a point to the Sunday sessions beyond keeping students up to date with current events. There are no speeches and no one interrupts the reading, but more and more students now know where the offices involved with alumni, communications and development are located. They are beginning to recognize the people who work in the building. And eventually they may catch something of the ongoing, continuing experience of being a Dickinsonian.

There is also an ecological note. One staff member has a machine which rolls paper into logs. His pile of "firewood" increases weekly. By the way, the variegated ink in comic sections makes for colorful flames.

WHO GOES THERE?

In late spring Dean Robert A. Barr was invited to speak to the College's AAUP Chapter on the beliefs and values that underlie his participation in discussions and decisions of Dickinson's senior staff. If, in fact, the administration is playing a more active role in decisions affecting the future of the College; if, in fact, senior administrators are influencing presidential actions—then, said AAUP president Harry Booth, in making the invitation, you owe it to us to define as clearly as you can your values and convictions from which the advice comes.

Dean Barr agreed to speak—for himself only. "I am not a philosopher, nor a psychologist, nor a particularly reflective person who is at home with abstractions," he said. "I find it easier to address fairly specific concerns and interests, and will do that tonight; hopefully, in a way that leads you to infer some general beliefs and values, although those finally will emerge from your observations of what I do here, not what I say."

The dean told the AAUP members that he has some deep commitments to an educational process and experience which is student centered, and which has as its central purpose creation of opportunities for individuals to assess their interests, develop abilities and finally to affect their fellows in positive (developmental) ways. He contrasted his beliefs to those of Walter Lippman who said that this sort of person-centered effort in a democratic society is wasteful—that what educators should be about is the design of national programs to lift the general level of literacy, of knowledge and understanding, of civic responsibility. The dean said that he thinks those grand designs have the real possibility of frustrating, or at best overlooking an individual's capacities for creativity and growth.

"I am interested," he went on, "in helping to create an environment where students develop an understanding of their human heritage, a feeling of competence, even of mastery in a few areas, and the capacities to make their knowledge useful to others—capacities gauged by the ability to read, to write and speak clearly, and to listen and judge the input they get from so many sources."

Quoting Alfred North Whitehead in "The Aims of Education" Dean Barr suggested two educational commandments: "Do not teach too many subjects and, What you teach, teach thoroughly."

One of the recent administrative evaluations, the dean told the faculty members, dealt briefly with the question of whether the College is trying to do too much in its curriculum and concluded that it is not. He is not so sure. Dean Barr is concerned that "we may be strung out too thinly in attempting to cover the breadth of human knowledge and that the mastery, the feeling of competence that students deserve a chance to develop is at times a casualty of institutional demands for coverage by members of the faculty, i.e. we are staffed for breadth but may not offer sufficient departmental depth as a result." He suggested, as one possible means of rescuing competency and mastery, that comprehensive examinations, both oral and written, be instituted in those fields chosen in advance by a student with faculty guidance.

"My advice to the president and others in curricular matters, should they ask, would be based on answers to the following questions:

Does the proposal speak to agreed upon ends of the undergraduate experience? or

Does it build largely on idiosyncratic interests of a person or department?

Does it raise the chances that students involved will come away with a fuller understanding of themselves, or simply with a basket of unintegrated facts?

Does it contribute to the strength of curricular efforts in other areas and to increasing the intellectual capacities of at least some members of the faculty?

"And my advice will be based, too, on a conviction that we must maintain a common core of knowledge in the curriculum. Our students—students everywhere—need to be able to converse with one another, to share an intellectual heritage and a knowledge of various attempts to understand the human condition.

"Lippman at another point deplores the fact that he finds in our society no common faith, no common body of principles or of knowledge, no common moral and intellectual discipline. We have (he says) established a system of education in which we insist that while everyone must be educated, yet there is nothing in particular that an educated man must know."

The dean said he thinks Dickinson has done a better job than many institutions in preserving a curricular core. Continuous discussion of the nature of that core is something that he understands as a measure of institutional health.

The dean proposed that a student should draw from the educational program at Dickinson the ability to make sound judgments, to see things in the light of their consequences, and to achieve an intellectual curiosity that will last a lifetime. Essential to these ends, he said, are the nature of the curriculum, the ways in which courses are taught, the faculty as effective models, and the opportunities for practice and reinforcement that exist or can be created within the student community.

"I suppose it is obvious," the dean told the AAUP members, "that much of my time and effort are spent on attempts to improve the quality of life on campus as I see it. I hope the Dickinson experience affects the quality of students' lives both on campus and after college."

Such an effort, he said, inevitably relates quality to values. Much has been written about the values that mark an educated person: tolerance, reflectiveness, skepticism, civility, judgment, the dean suggested. He restated his conviction that a liberal education has at its core the capacity for value development and that a portion of the birthright of a college is forfeited if it settles only for the transmission of facts—of information.

"Most of you know, or know of, Brand Blanshard who will receive an honorary degree from Dickinson this weekend," the dean continued. "Some of you know, too, that he is one of my intellectual heroes—a man who was already a legend at Swarthmore when I arrived and who had put together there one of the great undergraduate philosophy departments. He gave my graduating class its baccalaureate sermon—one that I still quote from, and remains a scholar whose work for me combines the heart and the mind in exemplary form and lucid prose. He published a collection of talks in a book entitled 'The Uses of Liberal Education' in 1973. I commend it to you and, in particular for my purposes tonight, the essay 'What Should We Get From College?'"

The point the dean attempted to make most clearly, with respect to the quality of students' lives, he called difficult to elucidate, because he feels it quite personally. "The essence of who I am—of who students are—is not a given, is not created for us, at least not only that. It is shaped by our choices over time, by personal relationships, by what we decide to value, by ideas and concepts we incorporate into ourselves or screen out as we go along. And most often, perhaps even by definition, that essence (that divine spark, my fellow Quakers would call it) is hidden from public view."

He quoted Brand Blanshard: "What is significant about a person or a people is the invisible things about them, the place where they keep their treasure stored, the unseen sun that determines their lives' orbit. And curiously enough, it is these unseen things that are most nearly eternal."

Dean Barr said he believes the College can have an impact on these unseen things, and that his advice to the president in the area of student life is based on that conviction. One of the clearest ways to help students with this formulation or reformulation of core values, he thinks, is to surround them with role models. The College, therefore, according to Dean Barr, should expend more effort than it does presently in searching for members of the faculty and staff who will value this function, who have a sense of themselves, a value system that they are willing to share with students in informal ways as well as in the classroom. "We (and I put my staff close to the center here) must search for new ways of involving such adults creatively in the lives of our students."

The dean also wants to renew the balance between freedom and limits in campus life. He suggests that although one effective method of learning, of value formation, is through mistakes—through the abuse of freedom; that can be a wasteful process, too, and he hopes that gradually a structure of collegial expectations can be introduced that will itself contribute to student development.

Blanshard said education is a voyage in self-discovery. Dean Barr asked, "It's true, isn't it, that we learn things in college about who we are mostly—or best, who we aren't or aren't so well; what we can do with enthusiasm; with modest success; or can't do it all?" The College has the responsibility, he said, to provide an environment in which a student develops the courage to undertake an effective voyage of self-discovery. The quality of a person's life is increased if he has developed the courage to stick with something until he knows how well he can do it and whether it is worth doing, according to Dean Barr. It is increased if one learns when to give up a hopeless pursuit, learns that experience illuminates boundaries. It is increased most of all when one can live with the understanding of who one is, he concluded.

"I read and reread Emerson's essay, 'Self-Reliance,' partly, I guess because the person he wants us to become is very different from the person I think I am, but the goal seems worthy."

"There is a time in every man's education," the dean quoted Emerson, "when he arrives at a conviction that envy is ignorance, that imitation is suicide, that he must take himself for better or worse as his portion." Emerson's injunction to "Trust thyself," said Barr, "is a command I find valuable in my office everyday."

The dean said he wants to create a climate where reflection is respected, where values are examined and refined, where self-knowledge is a realizable goal and where persons learn to value themselves.

The dean indicated he also advises the president on admissions strategies. He does this from the belief that in order to survive the College must attract able students who have an interest in and will profit from what it will do best for the foreseeable future—liberal education. Dickinson, he believes, cannot compete on an open admission basis or with vocational programs. If a choice must be made between maintaining reasonably high academic standards and student numbers—quantity—then, he says, Dickinson must opt for the former and determine to pay the short term costs in terms of various kinds of retrenchment. The College must develop a better knowledge of its potential student constituency, its location and the strategies needed to persuade those students to come. But, he adds, Dickinson must also be true to its heritage, to the abilities of the faculty and to the needs of society for liberally educated young people.

Then the dean listed what he called a shopping list for the future:

1. Administrative leadership. Increasingly the administration will have to become more aggressive in gaining a consensus on institutional goals, setting priorities for community discussion, protecting and supporting an environment that fosters liberal learning broadly defined. Models of civil servants, policy executors, service support are just not adequate in times when vigorous leadership is an institutional requirement.

2. A need to define the college's legitimate student constituency more broadly, to rid itself of the 18-22 chronological age limitation.

3. A need to be surer of the place that off-campus learning experiences should play in student development. The Lilly grant will help with this.

4. A need to ask more of our students intellectually. "I don't think standards are simply a function of demonstrated student performance in high school or on national exams. Precision in thought is for me one of the chief goals of a liberal education. Too many students are sloppy in their work—in their thinking. Evenness of faculty expectation and raised expectations would help.

5. "There may be new curricular emphases that would make sense as we continue to define the distinctiveness of the Dickinson program. I would welcome, for instance, an investigation of para-legal programs within the liberal arts framework—even given my earlier caution about over-extension.

6. "We should continue and intensify an institutional commitment to excellent teaching. This is what finally will preserve and extend this College. Excellent, imaginative, enthusiastic teaching broadly defined should be rewarded by the College above everything else."

He again quoted Whitehead, "You will find that some of the more brilliant teachers are not among those who publish. Their originality requires for its expression direct intercourse with their pupils in the form of lectures, or of personal discussion. Such men (persons) exercise an immense influence and yet, after the generation of their pupils has passed away, they sleep among the innumerable unthanked benefactors of humanity."

The dean stressed he was not denigrating research which can raise the quality of teaching. He wants to indicate, he said, that there is a job to do to persuade trustees and others that publication by itself is not a central benchmark of success at Dickinson, "that teaching—complex, difficult, hard work, is what we must value most."

The dean said that the final item on his shopping list is a campaign for funds to support adequately what the College wishes to do. "We cannot continue to rely on student-generated income for more than four-fifths of our operating budget," he pointed out, adding, "I hope we will have the courage to seek what we need, not simply what we know we can get."

Dean Barr concluded with two quotes that he said might serve to summarize the peaks and valleys of his personal and collegiate life—

John Jay Chapman:

"Is the education of the young the whole of life? I hate the young—I'm worn out with them. They absorb you and suck you dry and are vampires and selfish brutes at best. Give me some good old rum-soaked clubmen—who can't be improved and make no moral claims—and let me play checkers with them and look out of the club window and think about what I'll have for dinner."

Emerson:

"What I must do is all that concerns me, not what people think. This rule, equally arduous in actual and intellectual life, may serve for the whole distinction between greatness and meanness. It is harder, because you will always find those who think they know what is your duty better than you know it. It is easy in the world to live after the world's opinion; it is easy in solitude to live after your own; but the great man is he who in the midst of the crowd keeps with perfect sweetness the independence of solitude."

Four Different Men For Dickinson

Dean Barr's Statement of his philosophy serves as an introduction to members of President Banks' senior staff: George Allan, dean of the college; Robert A. Barr, Jr., dean of educational services; Leonard G. Doran, executive director of communications and development; John W. Woltjen, treasurer—the job titles are an indication of what they do, not who they are.

John Woltjen thinks that community service is possibly his hobby. Almost all of the treasurer's activities away from Dickinson are concerned with professional and community interests.

"Unlike some hobbies which are relaxing," he says, "these all have pressures, but that's what I enjoy." Even his reading is mostly professional since he is required to keep up to date, particularly in regard to taxes. John Woltjen's outdoor activities are limited to grass cutting. He claims not to be a gardener, pointing out that "my parents were avid gardeners and I got exhausted as a youngster."

Treasurer John Woltjen relaxes for a moment in his office.

The treasurer is a member of the Carlisle Planning and Zoning Commission and the Cumberland County Redevelopment Authority. In addition, he is a member of the executive committee of the Eastern Association of College and University Business Officers and a member of the program and taxation committees and serves as chairman of the program development committee for the national association. He is an officer of the Board of Directors of the Carlisle Building and Loan Association, vice chairman of the board of trustees of Allison United Methodist Church, and vice president of the Carlisle Chamber of Commerce.

This senior staff member finds intellectual enjoyment in his community involvement and additionally looks on it as something he wants to do as an officer of the College. In the local area he feels that this is a two-way street, showing what the college can do for the community and finding out what the community can do for the College. "In working with the committees I get the sense that people feel the college is good for the community; this is more evident than when I first came to Carlisle," he mentions. "It is not uncommon for a committee member to make a favorable or sympathetic comment. The general atmosphere is more positive."

Human beings in community is George Allan's interest. "Given that philosophical interest there are a lot of new resources for me in my job as an administrator, in human action, values, dilemmas. I am interested in what it means when human beings fashion an institution, have it come to mean what they intended and then more than they intended, so that it can turn back and devour them," the dean says. He adds that his philosophical ideas are being matured by his experience as dean and hopes that this maturing shapes his administrative style and decisions.

George Allan is a process philosopher, which means his emphasis is on processes, on becoming, on change. He says that this is not quite existentialism which takes its clue to the way things are by focusing on the human being in a crisis situation. In his writing, the dean attempts to develop an understanding of human beings and the communities they form by analyzing the structures of human action. From this general perspective, he thinks, one has a more adequate basis for studying how people deal with change and crisis. His work is greatly influenced by Alfred North Whitehead, Henry Nelson Wieman, and Daniel Day Williams.

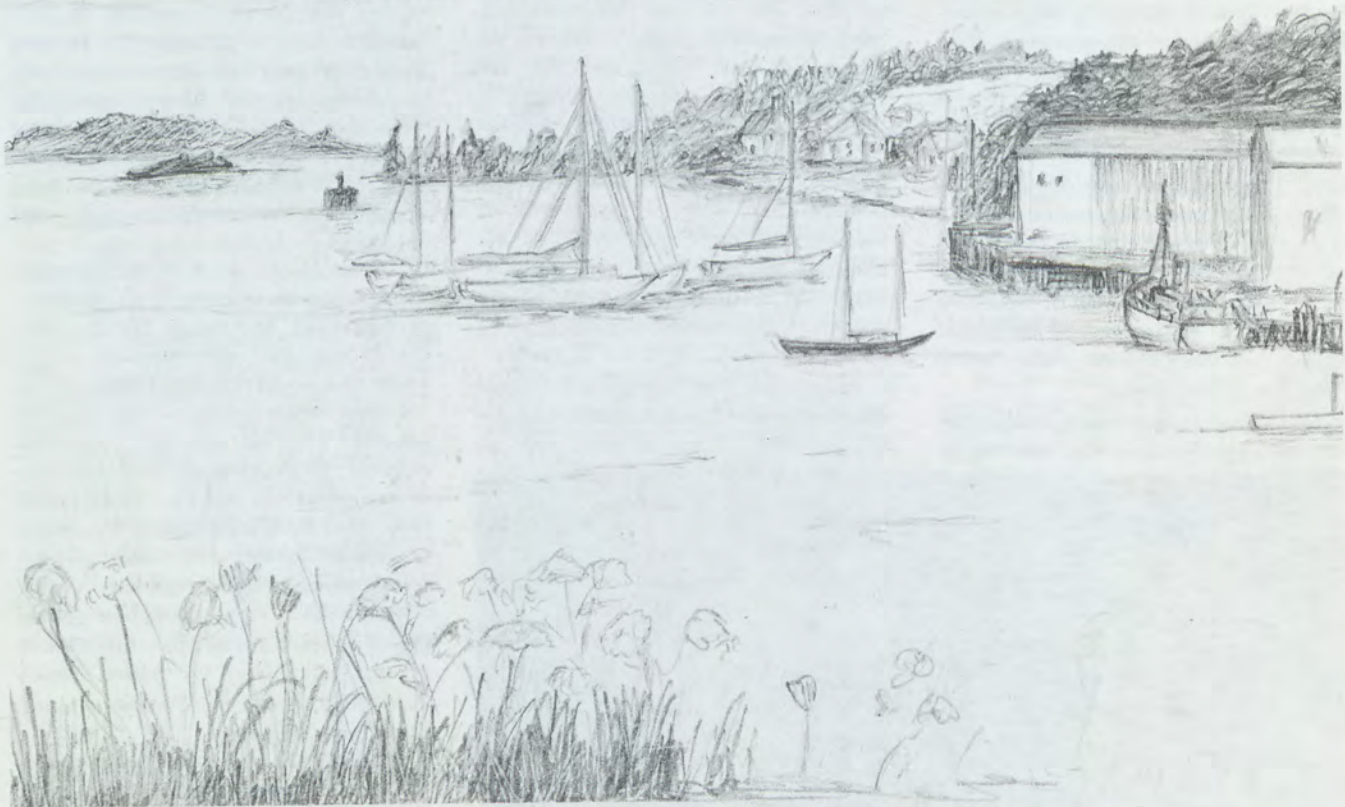

A few years ago, Dean Allan and a former Dickinson professor founded the Society for the Study of Process Philosophies which has about 400 members. In addition to a number of scholarly articles, the senior officer has completed a book-length manuscript of Jean Paul Sartre's "Critique of Dialectical Reason." The manuscript is used at several colleges. He also has a 100-page outline of a book on his theory of human action but is not yet sure that he will ever complete the book and publish it. Once a year the dean preaches in the College Church and some of the talks, which are a series, have been published.

When he isn't raising money for Dickinson, Leonard Doran says, he just likes "to watch the clouds roll by."

That is not quite accurate since the executive director is more amateur naturalist than dreamer; his cloud watching has a purpose. He finds the Cumberland Valley a great place to hike and canoe and combines some serious birdwatching and a lively curiosity about his surroundings with those activities. He is very knowledgeable about the hawk migration, for example, and has discovered freshwater bryozoa, moss animals, in Opossum Lake. The fund raiser refers all questions about these animals to Prof. Bill Jeffries, the Dickinson biologist who helped him with identification.

Dean George Allan makes a point.

The College's chief communicator and fund raiser knows well the local section of the Appalachian Trail and has roamed Blue Mountain trails, including the Hemlock Natural Area and Waggoner's Gap. Over a ridge beyond Blue Mountain there is a special place called Horse Valley which he and his wife first explored on a July day, enjoying wildflowers and butterflies.

Each summer the Dorans head for Nova Scotia where they have a son, his wife, and two grandchildren. There the senior officer indulges in another hobby, pencil sketching. Also of a more sedentary nature is an interest in serious music where his taste is catholic. In addition he tried to keep up with the "New Yorker," "New Republic," and "Time" magazines weekly and "National Geographic," "Harpers," and "Atlantic" on a monthly basis.

The executive director is active in the Carlisle Chamber of Commerce, serving on the community relations and education committees. He also is a member of the board of advisors of Opportunities Industrialization Center which tries to train people for entry-level jobs.

Bob Barr makes time to spend with his family on weekends since during the week he doesn't get to do that. "With the age of our kids, it is important to me to find some time to be with them," he says.

This desire includes traveling together in the summer and being assistant scoutmaster for one son's troop. "So much of my work is dealing with college-age students that it is refreshing to work with the younger children, to know a little more of what the developmental process is."

When not scouting or gardening, the dean is interested in his record collection and in reading. He says there is no real pattern to his reading but right now he is greatly interested in Carlisle and Cumberland Valley history. His family passed through the Cumberland Valley on the way west and he is doing some geneological tracing. The Hamilton Library in Carlisle has a good many publications on local history and he is working his way through that collection.

In music the dean's taste is for chamber music. The bonus in the chamber music of Bach, Handel and Haydn he feels, is the structure. Not much interested in contemporary music, the dean declares, "I am a romantic in music as in literature."

Dean Barr also is a sports enthusiast with all Dickinson teams as the focus of that interest. He attends as many practices and games as possible and serves as faculty adviser to the men's basketball squad. Many students are well aware, in addition, of his stubborn loyalties to the Pittsburgh Pirates and Steelers.

PNPA AIDE

Raymond C. Jones '70 has been named assistant to the general manager at the Pennsylvania Newspaper Publishers' Association, Harrisburg.

During the past year Ray studied international relations in Bologna, Italy, on a graduate fellowship from the Rotary Foundation of Rotary International. Prior to going to Italy, Ray was director of publications for Dickinson. His duties at PNPA will include writing, publicity and promotional work. Ray and his wife Janet Whiffen '73 are continuing to live in Carlisle.

MINING EXECUTIVE

William O. Barnard, III '71 has been appointed regional manager of industrial relations for Consolidation Coal Company in Library.

After graduating from Dickinson the new manager went to work as a laborer at Consol's Robinson Run Mine in the Northern West Virginia region. He moved to Moundsville, West Virginia in 1972 as personnel assistant at Moundsville Operations, Eastern Region. He was promoted to manager-personnel and industrial relations for Moundsville Operations in 1975. The Dickinsonian has taken graduate courses at West Virginia University.

OLDEST ALUMNUS

Dr. William A. Jordan '97, the College's oldest living alumnus, died August 11 in a Bedford nursing home.

The peppery Pittsburgh attorney and native of Bedford was senior member of the Allegheny County and Pennsylvania legal profession and was still practicing law in December, 1975. He had been practicing in Pittsburgh more than 75 years. Active and dapper until his final months, he had journeyed to his offices in Pittsburgh's Oliver Building at 10:15 each morning, greeted fellow employees and friends, and headed for his 22nd floor office. Until well past the time when he became 100, Dr. Jordan had commuted from his home in Wilkinsburg.

In an interview with the "Pittsburgh Press" on his 100th birthday, the lawyer said, "I'm really beginning to feel my age." But he added, "I don't know how people can say they have nothing to do. I'm as busy as I ever was. I cook breakfast and do a lot of reading. Can't stand TV."

The lawyer graduated from the Dickinson School of Law in 1899 and was the law school's oldest alumnus and the most senior member of its Board of Trustees. In 1947 the law school presented Dr. Jordan with an honorary Doctor of Laws degree.

Dr. Jordan specialized in civil trial practice until nine years ago, when he stopped accepting cases. He was admitted to practice before the Several Courts of Bedford County in 1899 and the Courts of Allegheny County, Pittsburgh, in 1900.

In 1903 he joined the Masonic Order and was a charter member when Beta Blue Lodge of Wilkinsburg was formed in 1906. Dr. Jordan was made a 33rd Degree Mason in 1956 and was a 50-year member of the Syria Shrine. He also for many years was a member of the South Avenue Methodist Church in Wilkinsburg, where he had served as board president.

FORMER FACULTY MEMBER

Irvine N. Smith, a former member of the Dickinson faculty, died June 28 in Grand Rapids, Michigan, following a two-day illness. He was at Dickinson from 1952 to 1956. At the time of his death Dr. Smith was director of the University Theatre and the Theatre and Interpretive Arts area at Central Michigan University. He joined the University staff in 1969 as professor of speech and dramatic arts.

Prof. William R. Bowden, who has remained a friend of the Smith family, has written something about the former professor:

"Irv Smith deserves most of the credit for welding the Mermaid Players into the cohesive, enthusiastic group that they have remained ever since. The Players acquired their name and identity as a by-product of a course in dramaturgy taught by Eric Barnes of the English department in 1949 and 1950, but when Barnes stopped teaching the course, they became a student-controlled organization producing a couple of plays a year with virtually no faculty help.

"Then in 1952 Irv came to Dickinson as an instructor in drama and speech—according to the Sellers "History" our first appointee in drama. His first play was "Beggar on Horseback," done in arena style in the old Commons, which stood behind Old West where the heating plant and parking lot are now . . .

"Irv's almost compulsive dedication to theatre caused the Mermaid Players' program to expand . . . the Mermaid Players' annual banquet and the Gould Drama Awards were among the traditions which began during his time at Dickinson . . ."

Dr. Smith's wife was an instructor in music at Dickinson for one year and directed the choir and community orchestra that year, 1955-56. She is living at 4462 S. Crawford Drive, Mount Pleasant, Michigan.

Legacy Plan: A Foundation for the Future

Joseph J. McHugh

Just about this time each year I like to say a few words about our Legacy Plan and the Legacy Roll Call. Total membership in the Roll Call stands now at almost 140. Membership extends from the Class of 1910 to the Class of 1970. In an attempt to qualify our new indications of support we believe that an estimate of $800,000 is correct.

Most of the indications of wills and bequests are in the $1,000 category. One thousand dollars is a lot of money. I am sure you can understand how important that kind of money is to Dickinson. A bequest of $1,000 given outright can provide partial financial aid to a student through a school year of study or help that same student by allowing the College to hold the line on the cost of programs. A named bequest of $5,000, when added to endowment and invested to produce an annual income, can produce an endless number of years of support for students yet to find their educational destinies at this venerable College.

Let me quickly show you what a larger gift of $25,000 will produce in tax savings and income. Let's suppose an alumnus wishes to make a gift to our institution. However, he would like to receive income from his $25,000 gift for life. He also wants his wife to have income if she survives him. To accomplish his objectives, he transfers $25,000 in securities to a unitrust which each year will pay him, and then his wife, 6 percent of the trust's annual value. The securities cost him $10,000 many years ago. His top income tax bracket is 50 percent.

• The alumnus gives the trust, $25,000,¹ in appreciated securities for which he receives a charitable deduction of $8,667.31 (based on his age and the age of his wife).

• This saves him $12,500 in income taxes (50 percent tax bracket x $25,000) plus savings ($3,750) of the capital gains tax on the securities' appreciation which would be imposed ($25,000 less $1,000 x 25 percent) for a total savings of $16,250.

• This reduces the actual cost of his gift to $8,750 ($25,000 minus $16,250).

• He, and then she, receives a six percent return for life should she survive him, which is $1,250² per year.

• However, computed on the actual cost of establishing the gift ($8,750), the effective yield is 6.86 percent.

The alumni to whom I am personally grateful are those men and women who again are serving as the Legacy Plan leadership and are contributing so many useful ideas. For example, our chairwomen for the Class of '26, Helen Douglass Gallagher and Georgia Krall McMullen, created the Class of '26 Endowment Gift. The Class of '26 rose to the challenge on its 50th Reunion and funded the project with an initial gift of $1,900. At the same time the class exceeded its overall Dickinson Fund goal by 153%.

I would like to take this opportunity to recognize these legacy class chairmen and chairwomen by listing their names below. When they contact you again this year by letter, consider taking the necessary steps which will establish a trust fund ($1,000 will serve as an initial gift to the pooled income fund) or a bequest stated as a modest percentage of your total estate. Your help through the Legacy Plan will someday aid future students to receive the same quality education that was yours. Join the Legacy Roll Call!

¹A gift of $25,000 will serve to offset estate taxes by the amount of the fair market value of the gift at the time it is made.

²The annual income received by the above couple will be determined by multiplying the fair market value of the trust—as valued each year—by six percent. If the fair market value increases, their income will increase. Conversely, if the trust assets decrease in value, the income will decrease.

FOOTBALL—THE COACH HAS HOPE

It happens in amateur sports too. The magic that existed between a quarterback and a split end—the precision, the hands, the field sense—suddenly becomes a series of incompletes off the fingertips, fourth and ten. Again.

The offensive guards and tackles who were boring gaping tunnels through their defensive counterparts suddenly find themselves pressed onto their own halfback near the bottom of a human pile—no more than a yard from the last pile. A defensive arm was allowed to trip an offensive tackle.

After 1975's disappointing 3-5-1 finish, head football coach Wilbur Gobrecht wasn't about to predict an undefeated season for his Red Devil gridders. But he didn't exactly expect to lose the first two games of the 1976 campaign either.

Dickinson opened with a 21-7 loss at Moravian and then dropped a statistically close 16-14 game to visiting Lebanon Valley. Gobrecht is taking nothing for granted, but he is not displeased that the Red Devils' next opponent is Swarthmore, a team that has had one victory in the last three years.

The running game must still be considered the Red Devils' strong suit. On any given day, Dickinson opponents may have the dubious pleasure of stopping the rushes of senior co-captain Jim Gerlach, junior George Washington, and sophomores Steve Cline and Kevin Gorman, who provide a more than adequate mixture of speed, power, and finesse.

Likewise the defensive backfield holds no serious problems in depth or experience. The depth problems are rather severe, however, in the lines.

The graduation of offensive guard stalwarts Greg Alex and John Misciagna precipitated the move of senior co-captain Jim Reilly from tackle to guard. Tackle Gary Smith, center Cal Shields and tight end Stan Wolowski are the other vets on the offensive line.

The defensive line required nearly total rebuilding. It now includes seniors Gary Meili, middle guard; Marty Heine, tackle; and Rob Cleland, end and sophomore Luke Clark, tackle.

Through the past several seasons Dickinson's cross country record has climbed and dipped about as much as the Camp Shand course the Red Devil harriers regularly challenge.

Last year's record was a dip to the depth of a 4-11 mark, but that was only the third losing season in the 18-year history of the sport at Dickinson. And coach Joe DuCharme, who steered the team through all of those seasons, is predicting another ascension.

The Red Devils' compact ten-man roster is spiced with the return of five lettermen: juniors Pat Galla and Jeff Watson and sophomores Tor Hepburn, Neil MacKinnon and Ron Zeigler.

John Johnston, assistant football coach

SOCCER AND A SWEEPER BACK

After ten years as an assistant, William Nickey has stepped up as head coach of the soccer team and given the squad a new look.

Nickey, who took over the reigns from athletic director Dave Eavenson, has adopted a 4-3-3 alignment with what he calls a "sweeper back" as the fourth fullback.

Whatever he calls it, it works. In their first two outings, the Red Devil booters clipped Lycoming 5-0 and turned around four days later to shut out Lebanon Valley 9-0.

Nickey's hopes for a big season hinge on a young roster which has only three seniors. The team, in fact, is captained by a pair of junior fullbacks, John Chase and Bob Cohen.

FIELD HOCKEY—NO MORE TIES

Head coach Katie Barber is confident that a strengthened defense can help her field hockey team improve upon its 5-5-5 record of a year ago.

Goalie Tanya McCloskey, the team's senior captain, will lead the defense that coach Barber is counting on to move some of those ties into the win column.

Returning with McCloskey are letterwomen Chris Colohan, forward and halfback; Joan Crowsers, inner; Sue Graham, forward; and Sue Horton, left inner.

NEW COACH, NEW TEAM

Coach Sandy Stitt, a new addition to the phys. ed. department, thinks her women's volleyball team has a better than average chance of turning out a winner in its first season of intercollegiate competition.

Previously recognized as a club sport, volleyball has gained varsity status at Dickinson with a team which opened a seven-game schedule on October 5 against Franklin and Marshall.

Six women play for each team in intercollegiate volleyball. The first team to reach 15 points wins the game, and a match consists of the best of three games.

Coach Stitt is a graduate of Western Maryland College where she received her B.S. and M.Ed. degrees. In 1975 she was named Western Maryland's most valuable volleyball player.

1975-76 Dickinson College Gift Report

Our Sincere Appreciation

With this report, Dickinson expresses its gratitude to the many alumni, parents, friends and organizations who made gifts to the College during the 1975-76 fiscal year. These gifts have helped Dickinson sustain and improve the quality of its educational program.

The contributors listed on the following pages reflect the various types of gifts to the College — outright contributions by individuals or organizations, corporate matching gifts, bequests, gifts-in-kind, and trust agreements.

In preparing the list of donors, it is the intent of Dickinson to recognize all who have contributed to the continuing advancement of the institution. While every attempt is made to insure the accuracy of the list, it is possible for errors to occur. If such is the case, the College would appreciate knowing. It should be remembered that only gifts received between July 1, 1975 and June 30, 1976 are included. Gifts received at a later date will be recognized in a future report.

Honorary Fund Groups

Of special importance to the 1976 Dickinson Fund were those donors who became members of the Dickinson Honorary Fund groups. Members of the John Dickinson Society ($1000 and up), Benjamin Rush Associates ($500-$999), Gilbert Malcolm Fellows ($100-$499), and the Dickinson Fund Honor Roll ($50-$99) comprised a good portion of the total amount of donors in 1976. Following is a listing of the members of these clubs.

THE CHANCE TO CHOOSE

Report of the President, 1975-76

The 15 months since I became president of Dickinson College have been filled with richly satisfying experiences: the zest of responding to significant challenges, the companionship of respected colleagues, and the pleasures of friendship with my predecessor, Howard Rubendall. I must add quickly to that list of satisfying friendships those students and faculty members, trustees, and alumni, administrators and townspeople who have shown two Southerners the meaning of the word "hospitality."

A president has the happy task of placing in perspective the varied purposes and activities of a college, its achievements as well as its limitations. I have chosen this method, the first of a series of annual reports to be shared with alumni, parents, trustees, friends of the College, and the campus community. Often such reports are, at best, a "show and tell" exercise, and at worst, a dry collection of statistics and clichés. Thoughtful people, recognizing both the value and the problems of our colleges, demand more.

NEGATIVE NATIONAL TRENDS

The pressures on higher education are national, numerous, and relatively new. They serve as both stimuli for creativity and threats to institutional fulfillment. Let us examine three of these threats.

(1) In recent years, Americans have become anxiously aware that the primary issues confronting institutions are far more complex than we anticipated or desired. The Viet Nam War, the energy crisis, the instability of the economy, and the barriers to purpose and integrity in federal and state government do not lend themselves to simple solutions. This perception of the complex issues to be faced has led often to problems of prediction and planning, to an impatient hunger for community consensus, and to an enervating alienation. The looseness of organization and the limits of administrative decision-making in colleges have intensified this problem for academe. W. M. Wise states:

The most important characteristic of the political system of the colleges under discussion is that the power to veto outweighs the power to adapt and to initiate change. In spite of a clear formal structure of authority, with boards of trustees at its apex, effective power is so broadly dispersed as the result of informal understandings that it is difficult for presidents, boards of trustees, and faculty leaders to exercise their authority. When they attempt to do so, resistance is almost sure to develop among faculty and student groups. Thus, effective government (at least in terms of the ability to initiate change) is frustrated in the college.

(2) Colleges striving for creative planning must attend to the increasing number and volume of voices beyond the campus. Federal and state regulations multiply, and the regulatory agencies extend their powers and demands. The result is the constriction of freedom of choice and action within the campus walls. Eric Wormald, vice president of the Association of American Colleges, comments on government regulation, "There is some pretty terrific bureaucratic empire-building going on. Over a quite short period, they've been constantly changing their regulations, always in the direction of tighter control. There is a real determination to collar the whole thing."

This is not to say that the motives of such agencies or the goals espoused are destructive. We must, however, distinguish between good intentions and paralyzing effects. The editor of "Change" estimates that at the state level, the addition of each new bureaucrat to executive or legislative staffs overseeing the colleges requires the addition of three college or university administrators.

(3) Colleges and universities (especially those in the independent sector) are feeling the pinch of two critical constraints: rising costs and projected constrictions in student enrollments. All colleges are feeling the pressures of inflationary erosion. President William Bowen of Princeton sums it up:

From the standpoint of long-term financial difficulties common to all of higher education, the central economic fact of life is the very nature of the processes of education and scholarship. To be done well, particularly at advanced levels, they require a degree of personal attention and personal interaction that simply does not allow the same opportunities for technological change, mechanization, and, if you will, increases in output per unit of labor input, that characterized the production of such goods as feed grains and calculators. As a result, we must expect the costs and prices of educational services to rise more rapidly than prices in general over the long run. It is all too easy to document this proposition: over the last decade alone, while prices in general have risen about 50%, the most widely used price index for higher education has risen over 70%—and there are reasons for believing that even this comparison understates the true differential.

The colleges are also witnessing the leveling of growth in our pool of traditional student applicants. The Carnegie Commission describes the matter tersely: "Higher education has been a growth segment of American society since 1636. It is no longer."

Most estimates concur that colleges face a slowing of their growth until 1980 or 1981, a probable drop in enrollments in the 1980s, and a slow upswing in the 1990s. The two primary causes cited, the declining birthrate and alterations in the manpower market, have led people to question the value of a degree in securing economic advantage.

SAFEGUARDS, OPTIONS, AND EXCELLENCE

In the midst of these sobering national trends, I sense in the Dickinson community a healthy, heartening spirit: a combination of far-sightedness and determination leading to realistic confidence. What kind of leadership can stimulate and sustain that spirit? Norman Cousins gives us a clue in his "Saturday Review" evaluation of Winston Churchill's life:

To Churchill, the highest privilege was the freedom to choose; the meanest affliction was to live without option. He gave options to a world quickly running out of time and space.

These words accurately gather the past year's activities at Dickinson around a central theme. Good leadership does not make things happen. Through sound governance, however, a college must safeguard its opportunities to develop creatively. I am not suggesting that leaders must passively spread all of the possibilities before a college constituency, inviting them to sample many goals and values in cafeteria fashion. On the contrary, we must search continually for the clearest expression of our deepest commitment and highest hopes. Effective planning can never be literally "valueless," preserving all opportunities and grasping none. Most institutions suffer, however, from a thoughtless neglect of those hard choices and actions upon which future developmental freedoms are founded. They suffer from a "premature hardening of the options," unwittingly bartering their larger destinies for a modicum of mediocrity.

It is a commentary on our times that the term "excellence" clatters with the flat, worn sound of a counterfeit coin. It is not that high quality and higher education are strangers. It is that many find it easier to talk about excellence than to strive for it. In our daily decisions, we must safeguard the options that can lead to a truly higher education. We must search for the finest students and scholars. We must examine our teaching rigorously and encourage its finer forms consistently. We must fashion our academic programs with the intense devotion and skill of true artisans. We must plead our cause and describe our goals vividly and precisely. In this fashion, the College leadership can offer all who love Dickinson a chance to choose a "touch of greatness." The following pages outline the activities of the past year and the plans for the coming year. These have been designed to give Dickinson the best chance to choose a way that it will not regret in later years.

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

A college is a melange of departments, divisions, and offices, producing a maze of courses, programs, and plans. The chance to choose educational excellence is given to those institutions with the academic vision, management skills, and communicative networks that can capture and reflect the full significance of a liberal education. This administration began with an intensive evaluation of its four divisions: academic affairs, business and financial affairs, educational services, and communications and development. After careful preparation and self-study, we invited outstanding educational administrators representing each area. These evaluators were drawn from Swarthmore College, Denison University, Stanford University, and Institutional Advancement Consultants, Inc. Jeremiah Finch, former provost of Princeton University, was coordinator of the study team. The result, a series of detailed reports, has been reviewed by appropriate College committees and the Board of Trustees. It offers an excellent baseline for annual internal evaluation of organizational structures, personnel, salaries, and functions within the administrative divisions.

At the same time, administrators, faculty, and students have been engaged in the development of a five-year plan for Dickinson. The document will describe pertinent national trends, provide a profile of the College, detail strategic goals and measurable objectives with attendant costs, set schedules for initiating and evaluating these programs, and assign responsibilities. Reviewed by an all-College planning seminar and appropriate committees, the plan will be presented to the Board of Trustees at its midwinter meeting and will be revised yearly.

The Affirmative Action Committee has completed the self-study of the College's policies and practices with reference to discrimination as defined under Title IX of the Educational Amendments of 1972, which prohibits discrimination on the basis of sex by federally assisted educational programs and activities. The report, now being reviewed by the committees and senior officers of the College, indicates that Dickinson has been moving with fairness toward the achievement of a non-discriminatory equitable system.

To further the development of our administrators, clerical, and service support personnel, the College will offer conferences, workshops, and report sessions in which campus programs and new management methods will be the focus. The Committee on Institutional Priorities and Resources will be conducting a study of the College's governance system, seeking to streamline our committees while retaining the "grassroots" input typical of Dickinson's administrative style.

The College has enhanced its academic and administrative computer capabilities dramatically. After exhaustive investigations and testing under the guidance of a hard-working Computer Services Committee, a computer inappropriate to the needs of the College was replaced this summer by a sound DEC 11/55 system at an admirable price. The committee also recommended that Computer Center operations be supervised by a single director working closely with coordinators of both academic and administrative computing. Staff changes and reorganization of the Center's quarters in South College were completed this summer. All of these efforts will lead to greatly expanded educational opportunities in computer science and computer assisted courses. We will also have much more effective computer support for our various administrative programs as we extend our long-range planning.

Someone has described Dickinson College as "the best kept secret in the Middle Atlantic area." To correct this impression, I have taken advantage of numerous opportunities to speak about the College and to define our purposes both on campus and before a total of 15 alumni clubs around the country. In addition, I have spoken to 18 other groups ranging from the Carlisle Area School District Teachers Conference and the entering class at the Army War College to the Friends of the John Dickinson Mansion in Delaware and the American Academy of Forensic Sciences. During the year, I have served as a consultant for the National Endowment for the Humanities to the University of Pittsburgh College of Medicine, the Wright State University College of Medicine, and Alderson-Broadbent College.

To enhance communication among campus and community groups, Mrs. Banks and I have entertained regularly the Carlisle-Dickinson Council, trustees and their spouses, members of the faculty, student groups, emeritus faculty, the Dickinson Dames, the Carlisle Civic Club, and families of prospective students. The College has also established a liaison committee with the Dickinson School of Law in order to nurture cooperation between the two institutions.

To retain the pleasure and understanding derived from the classroom, I have continued teaching within the limits that a presidency imposes. Last fall I taught an independent study on "Theological Implications of Jung's Psychology" in collaboration with faculty in the department of religion. In the spring I conducted a psychology seminar for juniors and seniors. This fall I have been a guest lecturer in the "Law and Medicine I" course at the Dickinson School of Law. These teaching activities are a refreshing way of staying in close touch with students and with my study as a psychologist.

DIVISION OF ACADEMIC AFFAIRS

In order to choose "greatness," a college must offer academic programs that will prepare its students to make creative choices as they engage a complex future. Under the able leadership of Dean George Allan, our faculty are continuing to provide such programs. Through a recent $230,000 grant from the Lilly Endowment, students will be able to participate in general education courses, internships, and advising programs specifically designed to relate liberal arts studies to the questions of value and choice they face in their career commitments.

Dickinson participates with 22 other Lilly Endowment-supported colleges throughout the nation in a Continuing Conference on the Liberal Arts. Study-values-career concerns are discussed in the context of common inquiry into the role private colleges should play in shaping the future of American higher education. The "Lilly Program" is very different from so-called "vocationalist" programs. We are not interested in training students for jobs. Rather, we want to help our students acquire and appreciate the generalizing skills which prepare them for varied and ever-changing positions of responsibility in society.

Another opportunity for the inquiring student is our new Nisbet Scholars Program. For the first time this fall, 40 carefully selected freshmen were invited to explore with professors the nature and history of the liberal arts. In seminars and small groups throughout their four years, the Nisbet Scholars will select their courses in the light of these continuing discussions. They will have an unparalleled opportunity to examine why they study what they study. This experimental program is designed to engage students and faculty in a four-year dialogue regarding the value of a college education.

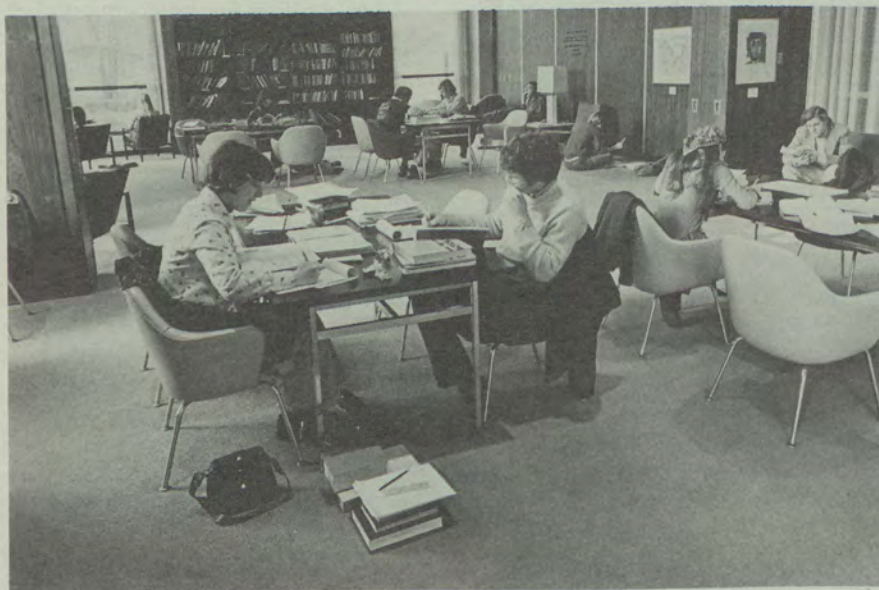

Still another new venture is our Senior Enrichment Program at the Cumberland Valley High School near Carlisle. We were well aware that there are advanced seniors who can profit from college-level courses but need to continue to mature within a high school environment. We therefore arranged for 13 Cumberland Valley seniors to undertake a full year of academic course work in classes taught by Dickinson professors, while continuing to enjoy social and extra-curricular activities with their peers in the high school setting. On completion of the year's work, they will be eligible to matriculate as sophomores at Dickinson or other colleges. Early reports indicate a strong positive response by students and faculty.

The College has also recognized that middle-aged and older adults may be eager to participate in some aspects of our liberal arts program. On an experimental basis, we are extending selected regular offerings to these so-called non-traditional students during hours when they can attend. A major consideration is the value that our young adult students may receive in studying with others of different ages. Indeed, there is strong reason to believe that a carefully planned "age mix" in a classroom can enrich the learning experience of all those involved, including the professors.

The College continues its emphasis on the depth of the liberal arts major balanced by breadth through interdisciplinary study. In the midst of our excellent traditional programs, there are new strengths in the areas of comparative civilizations and American studies. For example, courses in comparative civilizations this year include "Japan Inside and Outside" and "Dualities in Human Experience" (an exploration of the ways human personality is shaped in different civilizational contexts). There is an ongoing interest in the environmental sciences. The Committee on Health Professions has been strengthened in order to assist students interested in medical careers, and some of our physics laboratories are specifically oriented to pre-medical needs and problems.

It will come as no surprise that enrollments in economics courses are booming. Language study enrollments are also continuing to expand; of particular note is a sharp jump in the number of students choosing to take Latin. The course in political theory has become a very popular introduction to the field of political science. Enrollment in our writing seminars is steadily growing. We do not require such participation, but all freshmen this year who evidenced significant inadequacies in their writing skills voluntarily chose to include one of these seminars in their schedules.

A creative curriculum requires the presence of a capable and stimulating faculty. The type of intellectual pursuits in which professors are involved during year-long or semester-long sabbatical leaves offers one measure of faculty excellence. I have been meeting with Dickinson professors returning from sabbatical leaves during 1975-76, discussing their scholarly work with them. The range and substance of their accomplishments is impressive.

Paul Angiolillo has written a book about the Italian folk hero, focusing on a Robin Hood figure named—Angiolillo! Robert Nilsson spent his sabbatical in Europe analyzing comparative legal systems. Noel Potter journeyed to Antarctica and New Zealand with a geological team, studying the nature of glaciers. Charles Jarvis was a National Endowment for the Humanities Fellow in American history at the University of Michigan. Stephen Weinberger has been writing a book on social classes in medieval Provençal. Kenneth Rosen, a Fulbright Scholar, completed a novel and a book on Hemingway while lecturing at the University of Thessalonika in Greece. Robert Leyon's work dealt in differential analysis of trace metals in Colorado. Peter Steiner explored the work of Franz Werfel, a 20th century avant-garde German writer. Dennis Akin worked in his studio, painting on mammoth canvasses his vision of color in the air! Donald Bowie published short stories and undertook feature essay assignments for a national magazine. Wilbur Gobrecht completed a manuscript on the history of lacrosse while examining athletic programs at other Middle Atlantic Conference colleges. William Harms pursued his interests in Irish literature, and John Luetzelschwab prepared proposals for programs in health physics while continuing his studies in radiation physics.

Students continue to enroll in our modest but active summer school program. The summer session is an excellent time for faculty to "try on" new courses and new teaching methods. For example, we offered a class in journalism this summer. Some courses were offered in the evening to accommodate the interests of college friends and alumni in the Carlisle area.

It is of vital importance for us to maintain an excellent faculty and to make secure the excellence of the College. During the past year, Dean Allan and I met with the members of all academic departments, discussing these and other matters with each one. Our discussions, together with studies developed by the dean, made it apparent that the College must develop clear, far-sighted curricular and personnel policies if it is to retain and improve its quality during the difficult times that lie ahead for higher education.

Regarding personnel, the trustees requested two years ago that the College propose a plan for faculty development and tenure. Various groups on campus have engaged in lengthy consideration regarding these matters. The Faculty Committee on Academic Freedom and Tenure has been working since March on a proposal to be presented to the Trustee Committee on Educational Policy and Program this fall. The Trustee Committee, under the leadership of Dean Donald Shapiro of New York Law School, will make recommendations for action to the Board of Trustees at this fall meeting. These systematic efforts are designed to avert a potentially damaging trend among colleges. A large percentage of tenured faculty can be a serious threat to a college's future options. Students deserve the flow of competitive minds, a wide age range among professors that provides the most enriching kind of learning environment. Further, a college composed largely of tenured professors will not be able to attract the brightest new teachers, for they will know that there is little possibility for them to receive tenure in the future. The heavily tenured college will have less freedom to adjust faculty size if it becomes necessary to limit student population in the 1980s in order to maintain the quality of an entering class. In addition, a college with a faculty composed largely of tenured senior professors, devoting its limited funds for professional salaries to these higher paid positions, will have little leeway in offering salary raises during difficult times. For these reasons, it is very encouraging to see our Dickinson faculty and trustees planning ahead effectively to avoid these threats.

In the meantime, Dean Allan has proposed, in a detailed report, a range of activities designed to develop the capabilities of both tenured and untenured faculty members, and he and the College Committee on Institutional Priorities and Resources are developing proposals for foundation support of faculty development. Two major proposals will be submitted to foundations this fall.

DIVISION OF EDUCATIONAL SERVICES

If students are to exercise their options creatively in later life, they must have practice in linking their learning with daily living on the campus. Several years ago, Dickinson committed itself to meshing the classroom with all phases of a student's co-curricular life. The position of dean of educational services was created, and Robert Barr was chosen to fill that significant position. He supervises the division of the College which incorporates into one unit the following areas: admissions, financial aid, student housing, social and cultural affairs, counseling and advising, religious activities, and programs in athletics and recreation.

Support for our admissions program is very high on the list of priorities at Dickinson. The existing staff has been strengthened this year by the addition of a new admissions counselor and two clerical personnel; faculty and administrative colleagues of the five-member professional staff assist in interviewing prospective students both on campus and in visits to secondary schools; an alumni-admissions program, through which graduates of the College are actively involved in the recruitment of students, is in the process of being revitalized and expanded. Under the competent supervision of Larry Mench, our director of admissions, the positive effects of our recent student recruitment efforts are becoming apparent.

The Class of 1976 at Dickinson was the second largest class ever to graduate from the College. The admissions office was thus faced with the necessity of enrolling an unusually large group of freshmen and transfer students this fall. The staff's tireless work resulted in a class of 502 freshmen and 44 transfers. The high school class standing of the new freshmen is better than the very respectable class standing of those who entered last fall. Their mean SAT scores are 540 (verbal) and 569 (mathematical), somewhat lower than those of the previous class. The size of the drop is smaller than the size of decreases in SAT scores which occurred in the several years just prior to 1975, reflecting a national trend.

The number of visits to secondary schools in 1974-75 was about 260. It increased to 400 in 1975-76, and 500 visits are projected in 1976-77. Campus interviews have increased over last year for every month since June. In August there were 229 personal interviews on campus, the largest number in the College's history. It is gratifying that many prospective students continue to apply to Dickinson because of the encouragement of our alumni and friends.

As we begin in earnest the recruitment and selection processes for 1977-78, the admissions office is entering into the heaviest work schedule in its history. The aim is to continue to improve the quality of students enrolled rather than to increase the size of the College above a total enrollment of about 1650.

To support the admissions program, the College is making every effort to maintain and to strengthen the financial aid program. Last year Robert Hage of Dartmouth College, a financial aid consultant, reviewed the program. His report led to the implementation of more effective methods of awarding financial aid to those students demonstrating financial need. The amounts of financial aid projected for the current year are listed in Table 1.

Success in recruiting and retaining students, depends upon their satisfaction with campus life. For a number of years increasing numbers of students have expressed discontent with on-campus housing options, particularly the placement of independent students in fraternity houses in the quadrangle. When the fraternities moved to the quadrangle in 1963, the problem of underfinanced and inadequate off-campus fraternity housing was solved. But as fraternities diminished in size during succeeding years, it was necessary to fill the growing number of empty rooms in the quadrangle with upper-classmen who had chosen not to join a fraternity. Friction between the groups grew and reached serious levels of intensity.

Anticipating the need for solution, I appointed a Task Force on Social and Residential Life which is composed of students, faculty, alumni, trustees, and administrators. Dean Barr and Trustee Frank Tarbox are its co-chairmen. Both independent students and fraternity members are represented on it. The Task Force has issued a Report on College/Fraternity Relations that is marked by careful study, hard work, balanced thinking, and the desire to be fair to all groups involved. It is now being reviewed by the Alumni Council, the Student Senate, fraternity officers and advisors, and other appropriate bodies. After considering the report and the comments of all of these groups,

I plan to make recommendations about the fraternity housing situation to the Board of Trustees at its fall meeting.

Later this year, there will be further reports from the Task Force on social life and on the full range of residential options at the College. These reports will review the structures and the investment of funds that shape the social and cultural life of the campus. They will contain overall plans for housing which reflect the specific interests of students and the need for a balanced community life.

Dickinson's cultural activities are already impressive. Of special significance is the College's Cultural Affairs Series. Among the presentations it brought to the campus last year were the National Shakespeare Company's production of "MacBeth," the Margaret Beals Dance Residency, Will Stutts as "Mark Twain," the Prague Madrigal Antiqua, and the Pittsburgh Chamber Orchestra Community Residency. The latter group's visit was made possible in part by Pennsylvania State Arts Council and National Endowment for the Humanities support. A high point of its stay was a performance of the full "Brahms Requiem" in conjunction with the Dickinson College-Community Orchestra, the Dickinson College Choir, and the Swarthmore College Chorus.

Our Chapel Choir performed in a number of off-campus locales in the Carlisle area, and with a small vocal ensemble from Swarthmore both here and on the Swarthmore campus. Among its performances this year will be a concert at the National Cathedral in Washington in February. Performances by the Collegium Musicum, the College-Community Orchestra, and smaller ensembles added to the rich program in music at Dickinson.

Last year our student-initiated Israeli Dance Troup performed throughout the Cumberland Valley. The Mermaid Players produced four major performances. An additional four are scheduled for this year, including Glück's opera "Orfeo," produced in cooperation with the music department. A modern dance program is now in its third year. Students direct, finance, and staff the annual Dickinson Follies. Last year's production was "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum."

Other events and activities include topical "mini-weeks," a Spring Festival, a Black Arts Festival, a foreign film club, a poetry series, and a Student Senate Film Society which offers movies four nights each week. In addition, a student social committee presents three or four rock concerts each year.

Two art exhibits of special note gave exciting breadth to the impressive series of showings at the College during the year. The first was a week-long display of the "I Remember America" paintings of Eric Sloane, which opened during the weekend of the presidential inauguration last September. This fascinating collection of scenes depicting rural American life was made possible through the generosity of Trustee Daniel Terra and Mrs. Terra.

Our intercollegiate athletic programs have been augmented by the creation of new women's lacrosse and volleyball teams. In addition, a men's ice hockey club and a women's softball club are attracting interest. We now field ten men's and six women's varsity teams. Of equal importance are our ongoing efforts to offer all students opportunities for exercise and the development of recreational skills within the framework of both formal and informal intramural sports programs.

The second exhibition focused on Benjamin West's celebrated painting "William Penn's Treaty with the Indians" and the great variety of reproductions that have been created between the 1770s and the present day. Co-sponsored by Dickinson with the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia, the exhibition ran from mid-May to late September. It was largely the creation of Vivian Orleans Potamkin, who with her husband, Meyer, has long been a generous contributor to the College's growing art collection.

The Academy exhibition was entitled "Symbols of Peace" and was a visual commentary on man's desire for peace produced in celebration of our national bicentennial. Another contribution to the bicentennial was the production of a catalogue of the Norris Collection in the College library. The 315-page catalogue contains 26 pages of introductory material and photographs illustrating this unique collection of more than 1900 volumes drawn from the personal library on Isaac Norris, John Dickinson's father-in-law. The books were presented to the fledgling College in 1784 by Governor Dickinson.

Through the generosity of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Gerofsky and Mr. Charles E. Myers, the College has received two valuable collections of African artifacts. These significant pieces of sculpture and folk art will enhance our exhibits and serve as excellent teaching resources.

The College continues to encourage diverse religious activities and community service programs. The Roman Catholic mass, Jewish sabbath and holy day observances, and College Church services are held on a regular basis. The College received unusual recognition last year in the presentation of a Hillel Counselorship. Seder and Passover meals are covered by College funds. Students are actively involved in community service through participation in the Senior Citizen Action Center, Big Brother and Big Sister programs for disadvantaged children, and PEER (a summer program during which youngsters from the Carlisle area take part in social, recreational and educational activities on the campus).

DIVISION OF COMMUNICATIONS AND DEVELOPMENT

Chatting with Dean Barr are, on the left, Stephen Markwood, associate dean of residential services, and Mary Watson Carson, associate dean of special programs.

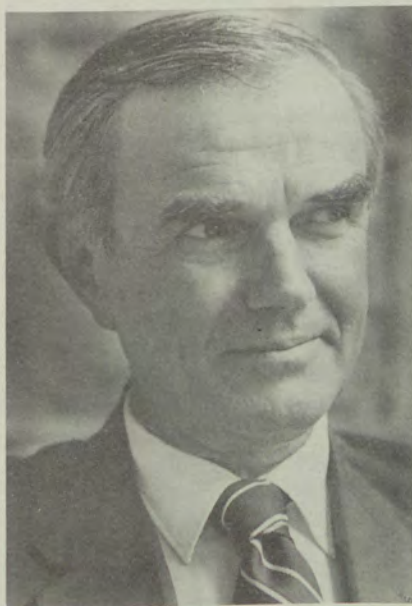

One of the Communication and Development Division's liveliest programs is Parents' Day, when included in the schedule is time for informal faculty-parent conversations.

If the College is to be free to serve fully, we must communicate our purposes clearly and muster our resources to the fullest extent. During the last two years, Leonard Doran, executive director of communications and development, has been building a strong team linking these two vital functions. In addition, a Trustee Development Committee, chaired by William Stuart, has been created. It is taking an active role in the College's planning. The newly formed Alumni Development Committee, chaired by Alumni Association President Robert Jefferson, offers promise of similar leadership. Dates have been set for dinners with all of the 19 clubs in the Association during this academic year. At each one, there will be a presidential address and an opportunity for discussion.

The effects of cooperation and planning are seen in the differences between patterns of giving to the College during the two most recent academic years. In 1974-75, the annual giving goal was $310,000; the drive fell short at $287,318. In contrast, during 1975-76 we exceeded our $350,000 goal, reaching the $363,645 mark, an increase of over $75,000. During the year, major donors tripled their gifts and the telethon giving doubled.

To obtain a $25,000 challenge gift, trustees gave or secured in non-alumni funds over $100,000. In addition, new giving among alumni produced $25,000 in matching funds. We contacted 22 foundations last year and received 16 foundation gifts totaling $428,220. The Legacy Plan developed 30 new will listings in the year just ended, bringing the total to approximately 140 with an estimated value of $800,000. Table 2 summarizes results of our development programs.

Our annual giving goal for 1976-77 will be $375,000, and I am delighted to report that our efforts have been rewarded through unprecedented recognition by the Charles A. Dana Foundation in response to a proposal presented by Dickinson. I was notified in September that we have received the first Alumni Annual Giving Challenge Grant ever awarded by the Foundation.

We indicated that the large advance in giving last year must be solidified; the single act must become a habit. To that end, the Dana Foundation has offered to match every alumni dollar over the $216,000 in alumni annual giving last year up to $250,000. This means that alumni can bring in up to $34,000 in matching funds through their additional annual giving during this academic year.

While the amount of giving has increased, the number of alumni givers has decreased slightly during each of the last three years. Dickinson's future depends on reversing this trend. The Foundation has challenged the alumni to provide 500 new donors who did not give last year. This would represent an increase of 15 percent in the number of alumni giving to the College. For every percentage point of increase, Dana will offer $2,000, a total of $30,000 for the 500 new givers.

Recognizing the importance to the College of giving by young alumni, the Foundation is challenging the classes of 1951 to 1976 to increase their commitments substantially. It will offer up to $20,000 in dollar-for-dollar match to these alumni classes if their total giving together exceeds last year's giving.

In summary, our alumni have the unusual opportunity of bringing in $84,000 in Foundation money through their additional giving this year!

The Dana Foundation grant has inspired some anonymous donors to add to the alumni challenge at one point. An additional $35,000 will be given by friends of the College to match the $30,000 offered by Dana if 500 new givers are found among the alumni.

This means that your gift to the 1977 Dickinson Fund may be instrumental in bringing $119,000 to the College this year.

Ketchum, Inc., has been retained to conduct a preliminary capital giving feasibility study, reporting to the trustees at their midwinter meeting. This is another example of the importance of keeping our options open. The College has urgent needs for scholarship aid. In addition, many have indicated the need for a new physical activities center. Through the Ketchum study, the College will be able to exercise sound judgment in selecting the appropriate time and purposes for capital giving.

The development of the College must be accompanied by the enhancement of our communications with those who care. For this reason, we have reorganized our public relations and news office functions and personnel in order to intensify and extend their effectiveness. Similarly, our director of publications, Nancy Winkelman, conducted a complete evaluation of the College's publications. "President's Perspectives" and the "Annual President's Report" are two new additions.

Responsible, far-sighted management of resources is the key to safeguarding the College's present options and future freedom of action. Treasurer John Woltjen and his staff combine sensitive planning with sensible management and evaluation, giving Dickinson the most for each dollar. Projections during 1974-75, which were based on misleading information and assumptions, led the College to enroll an insufficient number of new and returning students in 1975-76 to satisfy the requirements of the budget for that year. Through careful adjustments, the College was able to achieve a positive balance with a surplus of $5,044 on June 30, 1976. The sources of income and areas of expenditure are summarized in Tables 3 and 4.

During the year, we secured the services of T. H. Fitzgerald and Company to review our investment procedures with special attention to goals, guidelines, and evaluation. The Trustee Committee on Finance and Investments, under the chairmanship of Gibbs McKenney, has received this report. This is one more example of the need to anticipate future trends and review past procedures in order to have future opportunities to choose.

Another instance is the campus conceptual plan received by the trustees last year. This detailed plan of present and future physical plant possibilities is designed to make maximum use of the College's resources in future decades.

At the request of Wayne Modny, our food service director, the problem of waste and theft in the dining hall was reviewed by a task force composed of students and administrators. New procedures for decreasing food loss were established and will be reviewed regularly.

Despite a 10 percent decrease in the volume of fuel consumption, energy costs have continued to rise sharply (see Table 5).

Through the foresight of Mr. Woltjen and our trustees, we will be able to offset, partially, future rising costs through the purchase of an electronic energy monitoring system. Initially serving 12 major buildings on the campus, the system will cost $347,000. It is estimated that we will be able to pay for the system from energy savings in three years, saving thereafter approximately $100,000 per year. Contractual arrangements have been completed. All components are on order, and installation has begun. The target date for completion of the installation is February, 1977.

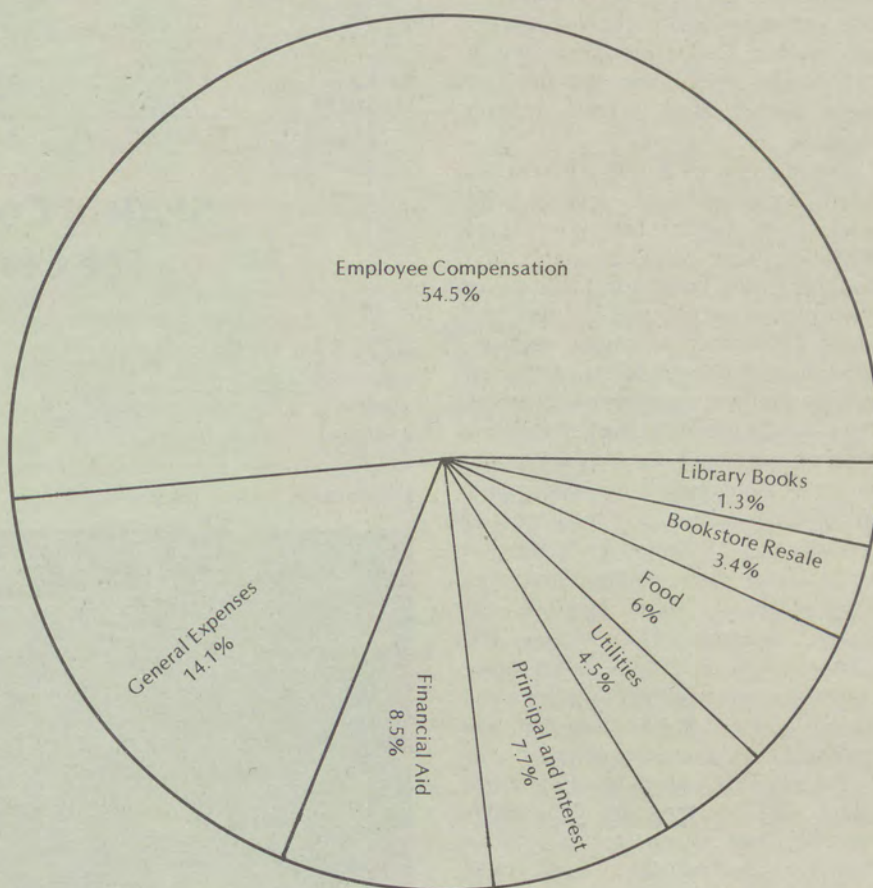

Student tuition and fees continue to rise in all colleges, public and independent. In fact, the percentage of increase is greater in the public sector. Unfortunately, it is a little known fact that the cost of educating a student is less in independent colleges than in state-supported educational institutions. This is obscured, of course, by the heavy tax base underwriting sizable student costs in state institutions. Within the private college sector, Dickinson has bettered its competitive position during the last three years, lowering its total fee structure in comparison with other independent colleges and specifically with our more immediate competition.

In early 1974-75, a list was compiled, in cooperation with the admissions office, identifying 43 institutions which enroll students of the caliber we seek for Dickinson. In 1973-74, 15 of these colleges and universities had total fees greater than Dickinson's, and 28 had fees under the Dickinson charge of $4,338. In the current year, among these same institutions, there are now 26 with fees greater and 17 with fees under the Dickinson charge of $5,200. (See table 6.)

You will note from the table above that in 1973-74, we were above the median and the average. We are currently below the median and the average. Nationally our picture has changed as well. In 1973-74 out of 758 private institutions, there were only 42 with fees greater than Dickinson's. This year there are 71 schools with fees greater than Dickinson's from among 727 private institutions. We hope to make further gains in this difficult struggle.

Our division of business affairs has been imaginative in seeking new sources of funds. The Washington Redskins were with us again this summer, using Dickinson facilities for their pre-season practice quarters, and some 2,000 others attended meetings, workshops and institutes as part of our active summer conference program. Such diverse groups as the Pennsylvania Health Conference, Coopers & Lybrand (a Philadelphia-based certified public accounting firm) and the League of American Wheelmen (bicycle enthusiasts) were among those who experienced, in some measure, the special qualities of Dickinson. The College received $290,000 as a result of its 1976 summer conference program, approximately $90,000 more than was received in the preceding summer.

We can thank our talented physical plant staff for the continuing maintenance and improvement program which makes the Dickinson campus so lovely. Its charm and dignity come as the result of the staff's painstaking attention to the impressive limestone structures, the banks of flowers and shrubs, the arching trees and the winding paths, all of which are cared for in scrupulous accordance with a campus conceptual plan.

George Eurich, director of physical plant, center, reviews plans for electrical wiring that will link 12 campus buildings with the central computer that controls the College's new energy monitoring system. With him are representatives of the company supplying the regulator.

Conclusion

We return now to the theme which shapes each page of the report. As Norman Cousins implies, an institution is its people. They alone can decide its destiny. Leadership can enable, offering the chance to choose between mediocrity and excellence, between mere coping and creativity. We must preserve and enhance the quality of Dickinson College at all costs.

A superb institution of learning is never the result of one climactic decision. It is the outgrowth of constant, thoughtful response. Colleges choose their futures in the seemingly prosaic tasks of selecting students, faculty, and courses. Our fates are formed by the priorities we set in expending our limited resources of time, energy, and money. In wise planning, decisive action, and honest evaluation, we can build the safeguards and supports that allow us to turn our dreams into realities.

Dickinson's greatest asset is its historic awareness. In reviewing our rich heritage, I sense the profound shared values that transform a wandering into a journey. We come together as a people with a deep mutual need, the hunger to know and an eagerness to participate in the exhilaration of learning. The very threats to liberal education become a stimulus to participate in this pursuit more keenly.

Because we trust and value the liberation that comes in learning, our commitments lead us into a challenging future.

A genuine community is not easily achieved, but it is worth the effort. Three ground rules may assist us. We can build a sense of mutual trust only through honesty in our communications and in our living. We must reject Harry Truman's facetious advice to politicians, "If you can't convince them, confuse them!" We must avoid the unrealism and false expectations generated by Aaron Wildavsky's recipe for social disaster, "Promise a lot; deliver a little. Teach people to believe that they will be much better off, but let there be no dramatic improvement. Try a variety of small programs but marginal in impact and severely underfinanced. Avoid any attempted solution remotely comparable in size to the dimensions of the problem you are trying to solve."

This first requirement leads to a strongly related second. Community is not achieved by ignoring or abandoning the values that we hold. A commitment to standards and principles is the prerequisite of any genuine relationship. One contemporary has said that our modern age is a pushover for the shallow and the shortcut.

Thirdly, a refreshing candor and commitment need not be grim. The university in which I was a professor required that students sign a statement at the end of each examination affirming that they had neither given nor received help during the test. One person in my class wrote, "You can see by this test that I haven't received any help, and God knows, I couldn't give any!" This comment leads me to the last ground rule. Adherence to principles need not blind us to the needs of each individual for concern and care. We must avoid a retroactive righteousness, a scapegoating of one group by another when we encounter the human limitations all too present in everyone. Painful questions and problems are intended to be shared. A friend of Henry Thoreau enthusiastically described the "new" miracle of telegraphy in the following way, "Why, it will even allow the people of Maine to talk to the people of Texas!" Thoreau replied, "But what if the people of Maine don't have anything to say to the people of Texas?"

We Dickinsonians will have significant things to say to each other and to our society. We will share our values, not only with words, but also in the commitment of our energies, our funds, and our talents. Our present choices can offer future Dickinson classes the fulfillment of Woodrow Wilson's dream: "A college is not only a body of studies but a mode of association, a home for the spirit of learning where, by the gentle infection of friendliness, the life of the intellect is made a general contagion."

Junior halfback George Washington goes to the air without passing as he sails Superman-like for extra yardage in the Red Devils' Parents' Day upending of then-nationally ranked Widener College. The victory leveled Dickinson's record at 2-2, and head coach Gobrecht says the last win of a similar magnitude was in 1947 when a Red Devil squad upset national power Washington and Jefferson 7-6 in the final game of the season.
