HISTORICAL NOTE

Julius "Steve" Kassovic was hired at Dickinson College in the summer of 1978 after receiving his master's degree at UC Berkeley in 1977. He was hired for a part-time teaching position in the Sociology-Anthropology Department, but he did not begin teaching until the spring semester of 1979 due to earlier low enrollment in the course he was originally scheduled to instruct. The folklore course, which ultimately resulted in the materials comprising this collection, subsequently became quite popular among students. Steve Kassovic taught at Dickinson College through the spring of 1984.

COLLECTION DESCRIPTION

The Julius Stephen Kassovic Papers, also referred to as the "Dickinson College Folklore Archive," are housed in five document boxes and are divided into six groups: Project Documents, A-Z Categories, A-Z Nations/Nationalities, Unfiled Assignments, Contents, and Miscellaneous.

From spring 1979 through spring 1984, Steve Kassovic taught a course titled Introduction to Folklore. The main assignments for this course involved students gathering pieces of folklore, be they jokes, stories, myths, ethnic expressions, etc. Most, if not all of the student assignments from this course comprise the bulk of this collection. In 1980, Steve Kassovic described the Dickinson College Folklore Archive as follows:

Made up from class projects of Antro. 201 students, the archive is a collection of examples from over 40 different ethnic and language groups, covering more than 50 genres of folklore. Although the archive, located in 2A Denny, was established primarily for anthropology students it can be a resource of great interest to students in fields such as American Studies, History, Psychology, Sociology, and the languages.

The Project Documents materials include the index terms utilized for the archive. Developed at UC Berkeley, this indexing schema was subsequently adapted by Kassovic for this folklore collection. Also included are the project guidelines for the folklore class. These are the guidelines which students were instructed to follow when completing their assignments.

The A-Z Categories materials comprise the largest section of the collection. The individual folklore stories collected by the students were filed into these subject categories and sub-categories, which are based on the indexing schema included with the Project Documents. Steve Kassovic himself is believed to have filed these materials, and no attempt has been made to change their arrangement.

The A-Z Nations/Nationalities materials contain folklore items specific to peoples of a country or ethnic group. Specific subject categories within these national grouping are listed in the inventory for reference purposes.

The Unfiled Assignments materials are composed of student projects which had not been separately filed according to subject category prior to their being deposited in the college archives. Most of these projects date from the spring of 1984, Kassovic's last semester teaching this course at Dickinson College. There are also a few from the summer of 1981 and a single project from the summer of 1979. These items are arranged alphabetically by student last name.

The Contents materials include the tables of contents and lists of informants for each student collection of folklore reports. These have been alphabetized by student last name, with a number of unattributed items being included at the end of the series.

The Miscellaneous materials includes one folder of legends and lore specific to Carlisle and the central Pennsylvania area and one folder of additional assignments that were not previously categorized and filed according to the established schema.
