Leicester 13 June 1843.

My dear Sir,

In answer to yours of the 29th ultimo, I regret to be obliged to inform you that I cannot interfere in any appointments under Mr. Tyler's administration. This course I have pursued from the beginning, without deviation; and I think, I shall pursue it until the end. I should not willingly serve you under other circumstances. — You may rest assured, however, that my recommendation would be of no service to you. The hostility of the administration towards me is manifested in the Madisonian whenever an occasion offers. Poor Tyler! He is a well disposed & well informed man; but he is more egregiously humbugged than any man I have ever known.

We have no local news here of the least importance.

Your family & friends are all well I believe except the Doctor who has been somewhat unwell for some days. The Colonel has gone to Delaware to bring Abby home I presume.
