ON THE COVER

The earliest Dickinson football team photograph located to date is the 1899 team—the fifth team to represent Dickinson on the gridiron. Do you recognize any members of this team? Can you help us to locate a picture of an earlier team? We invite your help in the development of a history of football at Dickinson.

THE EARLY YEARS

1885-1911

The First of a Two-Part History of Dickinson Football

THE MAN who was instrumental in arousing interest in football on the Dickinson campus was Dr. Fletcher Durell, a professor of astronomy and mathematics. An alumnus of Princeton, he brought his great interest in football to the campus from the scene of the first intercollegiate football game, played in 1869. On Saturday, November 14, 1885, Dickinson College participated in its first football game, facing Swarthmore at the old Carlisle Fairground field (the present location of the Masland plant). Swarthmore, which had started playing football several years previously, had too much experience for the younger "followers of the Mermaid" (an early nickname) and won the initial game 34-0. Dr. Durell played as a rusher (line-man) in this first game and in later games, he served as referee.

It was this game on November 14 that ushered in the early years of Dickinson football. In 1912, significant rule changes were made. Such rules as 4 downs to make 10 yards, 6 points for a touchdown, kickoff from the 40 yard line are the same today. It is for this reason that 1912 is considered to be the beginning of modern football. Dickinson, therefore, participated from 1885 through 1911 in what is considered to be the pre-modern football period. During these 27 years, Dickinson participated in 214 games. They won 94, lost 107 and tied 13. Against present day opponents the Dickinson eleven fared rather well, winning 13 of 16 games with Haverford, 9 of 16 with 3 ties against Franklin and Marshall, and 7 of 11 with Ursinus. Lafayette, which was met for many years in a Thanksgiving Day game on a neutral field, beat Dickinson 16 out of 18 games. Pennsylvania State University held a 10 to 4 victory record. Swarthmore won 8 of 13 games and Bucknell won 6 of 12 with 2 ties. Lebanon Valley did not score upon the Red Devils in the 6 games played. Dickinson also had an all winning skein against Susquehanna of 6 games. Western Maryland beat Dickinson once in 7 games. The only team played regularly over which Dickinson did not hold a victory was the University of Pennsylvania. Penn also holds the record for having the largest score against us in this period, a 78-0 victory in 1892. The largest score which Dickinson ran up against an opponent was a 58-0 victory over Albright in 1904. In 1898, the Red and White beat Lebanon Valley 56-0 and held two 52-0 victories, one over Johns Hopkins in 1891 and one over Villanova in 1897.

It was not until 1896 that Dickinson had a full time coach. Prior to that, the captain of the team was usually the player-coach, or a part time coach would help. The first full time coach was Nathan Stauffer, who came to Dickinson in 1896. During his four years as football coach he compiled an enviable record of 25 wins, 15 losses, and 3 ties. The researchers say that this period may well be the "golden years of Dickinson football." His four teams scored a record total of 667 points, and his athletes are considered to be some of the greatest ever to wear the Red and White of Dickinson College.

The coach of the 1902 and 1903 teams was Charles P. Hutchins, a medical doctor. He played football at Williams and Columbia and had coached at Adelphi and several other places before coming to Dickinson. During his two-year reign, his teams compiled a record of 11 wins and 11 losses. In 1905, J. William Williams, '04, who had starred at Dickinson and had gone on to the University of Virginia to pursue a course in medicine, returned as Dickinson's head coach. His two-year record was 7 wins, 7 losses, and 2 ties. After his graduation in 1899, Forrest E. "Cap" Craver was always on the football scene, either as the head coach or as one of the assistants.

The referees were chosen haphazardly. In most cases, a member of each team or the teaching staff of the colleges involved would officiate. It has already been mentioned that Dr. Durell, the prime mover for football at Dickinson, refereed many games, as did Professor Willard G. Lake, '87, who played on the first Dickinson football team and later was its coach and trainer. On November 18, 1891, the F and M game was cancelled because the assigned officials did not show up for the game and neither team could agree to a selection of officials.

In the early years of Dickinson football there were many instances of arguments and even cancellation of games leading from discussions concerning guarantees. In its initial year, Dickinson was to have played a return game with the Harrisburg Cricket Club but they were refused a $50 guarantee. A game with Johns Hopkins in 1889 was cancelled because of wet ground and rain. The report of the cancellation made a point of stating that Johns Hopkins paid the guarantee. The Thanksgiving Day game in 1891 with Penn State was to have been played at Altoona, but the game was cancelled because there was a mixup concerning a proposed guarantee for the game.

Scoring at that time was 4 points for a touchdown, 2 points for a goal (point after touchdown), 5 points for a field goal, or as they called it at that time a goal from the field, and a safety, 2 points. These values prevailed from 1884 to 1897, when they were changed again: a touchdown 5 points; a field goal, 5 points, a goal 1 point and a safety 2 points. In 1909, a field goal was reduced in value to the present 3 points. In 1912, the touchdown was increased to 6 points.

This history was written from a definitive statistical summary of the 77 year history of football at Dickinson College compiled by the football coaches, Donald Seibert and Wilbur J. Gobrecht, '52. The researchers found many discrepancies in the statistics and went to great lengths to corroborate the information they obtained from campus sources, using Carlisle and Harrisburg newspaper morgues and other college newspapers. In some cases the information included in the statistics was based on their estimate of which source would be the better authority. Any reader having additional information or discovering any mistakes is invited to contact either of the coaches at the College.

1885 The second and last game of the 1885 season was a November 18 game with the Harrisburg C C, which Dickinson won 34-0. The first player coach was Willard G. Lake, '87, who went on to become instructor of physical culture and hygiene at the College. It was Lake who scored the first Dickinson touchdown—against Swarthmore. One of the first directors of athletics was Edward M. Biddle, '86, who also played the game. (Three students were selected to be directors of athletics. They were responsible for all schedules, arrangements for trips, paying guarantees, and any other business transactions. This practice continued for about 10 years.) A newspaper account reports that Dickinson played a scrimmage game and won 54-0 over a "picked 15" on Saturday, October 24.

1886 Again in 1886, the player coach and captain was Willard G. Lake. Three games were played against Lehigh, Lafayette and Swarthmore. Dickinson lost all three. Dickinson College's only death from football occurred in 1886, when E. Herbert Garrison, '89, succumbed as a result of an injury received during the Swarthmore game. He was tackled on the pitcher's mound, which happened to be the only hard spot on the field.

1887 Dickinson met the same 3 opponents as in 1886 and with the same results—they lost all 3. Samuel S. Wallace, '90, who was the player-coach the following year, scored Dickinson's only points for the season in the Swarthmore game when he scored a touchdown and kicked the point after touchdown.

1888 Player-coach Samuel S. Wallace led his team to its first victory in three years when they defeated Penn State 16-0. During the year they also tied Penn State and lost to Bucknell. It is reported that during the Bucknell game, Dickinson scored 3 touchdowns which did not count in the official score. The team was so disgusted that they almost walked off the field before the game was over.

1889 This was the first of Dickinson's winning seasons. They won 4, defeating Bucknell, Swarthmore, F and M, and Haverford; held Navy to a scoreless tie; and lost to F and M in the final game of the season 22-0. The Swarthmore game was disputed when Dickinson ran out of substitutes and a former Dickinson athlete, William W. Wharton, '89, ran from the stands and played the final few minutes in his street clothes.

1890 The 1890 team was the first to play a full schedule of 9 games. They won 3, defeating Haverford twice and Swarthmore, and lost 6. On October 17, Bucknell helped Dickinson open its new athletic field, at the corner of West Louthur and Cherry Streets—the site of the Reeves-Hoffman plant, by besting the Red Devils 12-0. In February 1891, Dickinson joined the Pennsylvania Intercollegiate Football Association. Other member colleges were Bucknell, F and M, Haverford, Penn State and Swarthmore.

1891 Dickinson started off in grand style this year, upsetting Johns Hopkins 52-0 and Haverford 22-4 in its first two games. Then followed a 46-0 defeat by Swarthmore and a 34-4 defeat by Navy. The season ended on November 21 with a 0-0 tie with Bucknell. Two games were cancelled this year: one with F and M because of a disagreement over the officials, and the second on Thanksgiving Day with Penn State because of a mixup concerning a guarantee.

1892 Dickinson's only victory in a 9-game season this year was disputed by Gettysburg, as they claimed a "stuffed eleven." The Gettysburg College newspaper indicated that Dickinson was using ineligible players including: "a Gettysburg butcher, a Hanover sport, a Carlisle Indian and other foreign matter." The Penn State game was played on Thanksgiving Day at Harrisburg. It also involved a dispute which involved Caswell, who was to be captain of the first Indian school team, the following year. As Caswell was catching a punt, a Penn State player got the ball from him and scored after Caswell had yelled, "Down."

1893 Dickinson's only victory was a 28-6 win over Haverford. Also included in the season was a practice game with the new Carlisle Indian School, which Dickinson won 16-0. They lost 6 during this season including a 42-0 loss to F and M and a 20-12 loss to Bucknell in Harrisburg on Thanksgiving Day. It was noted in several accounts that there were many freshmen and prep school players on this team and they lacked experience.

1894 In a season closed early by action of the executive committee, Dickinson won 2, lost 2 and tied 1. One of the losses was a 66-15 walloping at the hands of Swarthmore. The Red Devils tied the Carlisle Indian School 12-12, and beat Ursinus and Haverford. This was the first year in which there was any account of a training camp for the football team. On August 12, the football team went into training at Pinkney's farm.

1895 One result of a winless season, in which a scoreless tie with F and M was the only saving grace, was the feeling of many people around Dickinson that basketball would replace football. In repute of this sentiment, Dr. Reed, Dickinson's president, called basketball "diluted football." One of the reasons for a reduced schedule of four games this year was due to the lack of funds. According to the athletic constitution, the athletic treasury had to have $300 in it before any games could be played. Most of the money came from student contributions. The only player to score in this season was Harry C. Lowther, '98, who scored a touchdown in the Haverford game which Dickinson lost 5-4.

1896 Dickinson's first season under a full time coach was a successful one. The team won 5 and lost 4, including 4 shutout victories and one game forfeited. The Bucknell game was claimed by Dickinson when Bucknell failed to lineup following a dispute. This game was played at Sunbury. A game with F and M was cancelled by them. Dickinson fans believed the reason for the cancellation was that Dickinson was too strong and fast for F and M. It was in this year that C. Oscar Ford, '98, scored 66 points, mostly on his goal kicking ability. Ford scored a two-season total of 119 points.

Two of Dickinson's earliest football heroes—C. Oscar Ford '98 (left) and Forrest "Cap" Craver '99.

1897 Pre-season practice was held before college opened at Phoenixville, where the team was the guest of the Phoenix A. A. In its second season under Coach Stauffer, Dickinson continued its winning ways with a 6-3-2 season. The season was climaxed with a 6-0 victory over Penn State on November 25 at Sunbury. The 1897 team was the first team to be awarded the official "D." In order to earn the award, the player had to play in at least 4 intercollegiate games in one season. In the Villanova game, which Dickinson won 52-0, Charles H. Clippinger, '99, ran 90 yards for a touchdown from the line of scrimmage.

1898 The 1898 team set many records, some of which stand to this day. They scored the most wins in one season (8), the most shutouts in one season (7), the most points scored in one season (211), and the most consecutive victories in one season (6). This was undoubtedly one of the best teams ever to represent Dickinson College. The two losses during 1898 were to Bloomsburg Normal, 6-0, and the Carlisle Indians, 46-0. Included among the victories were the 56-0 defeat of Lebanon Valley and a 44-0 victory over Gettysburg.

1899 Coach Stauffer's last year as a coach was marked by a 6-6-1 season. Thirteen games is more than that played by any other Dickinson football team. Included in this season were a 51-0 victory over F and M and a 41-0 win over Mt. St. Mary's. The final game of the season was a 36-0 loss to Lafayette. On October 21 the Red Devils lost to the Carlisle Indians who were coached for the first time by Glenn "Pop" Warner. In the F and M game, Edwin F. Hann, '01, who was captain that year, made a 90-yard touchdown run.

1900 A new coach in a new century led Dickinson to a 5 won, 5 lost season, including victories over Swarthmore, Penn State, Haverford, Gettysburg, and F and M. The Thanksgiving Day game this year was played against Lafayette at Easton.

1901 The 1901 team scored victories over Susquehanna, Haverford, Swarthmore, and a Philadelphia Medical school team in their first losing season in five years. They lost 6 and won 4 this year under a new coach, Ralph F. Hutchinson from Princeton.

1902 In Coach Charles F. Hutchins' first year, the Red Devils won 4 and lost 6. They defeated Lebanon Valley, Navy, Haverford and Lehigh. The annual Thanksgiving Day game was against Lafayette and Dickinson was defeated 23-0. In the Lehigh game, Dickinson staged a fierce goal line stand. Lehigh had first and goal on the two-foot line and did not score. On November 8, the Red Devils were suited in new uniforms and proved worthy of the expenditure with a 34-0 victory over Haverford. Before the Penn State game the team was taken to Sterrett's Gap on Thursday for rest and secret practice at the Mansion House.

1903 The 1903 team recorded a 7-5 season, including a 45-0 victory over Albright to begin the season. It was climaxed by a 35-0 victory over Lafayette in the Thanksgiving Day game. It was in the Lafayette game that the most spectacular play of the season occurred. Captain J. William Williams, '04, scored on a 95-yard touchdown run on a kick-off return. Pre-season practice at Pine Grove Furnace opened on August 30 with 24 men in attendance. Dickinson was to have played Lebanon Valley but, according to the Dickinsonian, Lebanon Valley cancelled the game because of the high score that was run up against Albright. On September 26, Dickinson helped to dedicate the new stadium at the University of Pennsylvania—Franklin Field. On this day the Quakers downed the Red Devils 27-0. Dickinson held their last four opponents scoreless and were rated 12th in the nation by Casper Whitney in Outing magazine.

1904 The only team in this period which might argue with the status of the 1898 team would be the 1904 squad which also scored 8 victories. It was this team that scored the most points ever scored in one season by a Dickinson team, when they scored 219 to their opponents 53. An 8-3-1 record was the result of the efforts of Forrest E. "Cap" Craver and several assistants, including the former star, J. William Williams. The highest score against an opponent, a 58-0 victory over Albright, is also a record held by this team. One of the quickest scores by the defense in football history is credited to Dickinson in its Ursinus game. Robert F. Rich, '07, kicked off to Ursinus. They fumbled the ball in mid-air on the 20-yard line. It fell into the arms of Andrew J. English, '06, who ran on to score a touchdown. Another outstanding play occurred against Washington and Jefferson, when Charles M. Salter, '06, made 130 yards on four end sweeps. The 1904 team held their opponents scoreless in 7 games and had 4 shutouts in a row.

Record holders Paul J. Davis '07L and Frank Mt. Pleasant.

1905 Coached by former star J. William Williams, the Red Devils of 1905 had an even 4-4 season. This included victories over Western Maryland, Haverford, Ursinus and Lehigh. At least two records were established in this season. The first was a 58-yard field goal kicked by Paul J. Davis, '07L, in the Western Maryland game. He kicked another field goal for 53 yards in the Western University of Pittsburgh (Pitt) game. The second record was established by a substitute back, Benjamin M. McIntyre, a Dickinson Preparatory School student, who returned a fumble 101 yards for a touchdown in the same game. Captain Davis also returned a kick-off in the Lehigh game for 80 yards.

1906 In Williams' second year, as coach, his team won 3, lost 3 and tied 2. This season included a 26-0 victory over Lebanon Valley, a 4-0 victory over Ursinus and a 28-10 win over Susquehanna. Dickinson lost to Penn State 6-0 in a game played at Williamsport.

1907 The first losing season in many years occurred in 1907, when the team won 3, lost 6 and tied 1. It was also marked by 6 games in which the Red Devils were unable to score. A 70-yard touchdown run by Grathwold C. Curran, '10, was the outstanding play in a dismal season.

1908 The 1908 team won 5 and lost 4 in a season in which former star Paul J. Davis coached the Red Devils. The Western Maryland game opened the season as part of a double-header. The Carlisle Indians played Villanova in the second game. Lehigh cancelled a game which was to be played against Dickinson on October 24 because of the question about whether Frank Mt. Pleasant was eligible to play collegiate football. He was a former star for the Indian School. The Bucknell game on November 14 was played in 3 inches of snow. Mt. Pleasant kicked the ball 80 yards in the Gettysburg game.

1909 The 1909 team opened Herman Bosler Biddle Field on September 25 with a 5-0 win over Western Maryland. The team compiled a 4-4-1 season, which included victories over Gettysburg, Johns Hopkins, Western Maryland and Mt. Carmel, a team made up of All-Star sandlot players from the coal regions. Frank Mt. Pleasant set an all-time college record by kicking 6 field goals in this season. He had a career total of 8.

1910 The 1910 team had the dubious distinction of receiving the first loss on Biddle Field, the first loss to Western Maryland and the first points scored by opponents on this field. The three victories in a 10-game season were over Lebanon Valley, 14-0; Bucknell, 9-6; and St. John's, 12-0. This was the first year in which Francis A. "Mother" Dunn, '14, participated in Dickinson football. He was to go on to become a Dickinson football immortal.

1911 Simon F. "Si" Pauxtis came in 1911 and brought with him as his trainer, Richard H. "Mac" MacAndrews. Coach Pauxtis took 20 men to Pine Grove Furnace before their opening game on September 20 with the Carlisle Indians. The Indian School now boasted James Thorpe, the immortal All-American. It was reported that Hyman Goldstein, '15, at quarterback, and Francis A. "Mother" Dunn, right-halfback, showed the same kind of running skill as their more famous opponent. The Carlisle Indians won the game 17-0. Following this game, Dickinson went on to beat Western Maryland, F and M, Gettysburg and Delaware, while losing four games to compile a 4-4 record.

The 1911 season was the end of the pre-modern period of football. Across the nation a "new" game began the following year with the new rules basically the same as today's. The October 1963 issue of the Alumnus will bring the story of modern Dickinson College football.

The City Hall and Dickinson College Lottery

By Philip Gardiner Nordell

DURING THE more than half a century corresponding to the period from Washington's boyhood to his death, scarcely a murmur was heard, except among the Quakers and some minor sects, in opposition to American lotteries on religious or moral grounds. And despite mounting criticism, they continued generally in good repute during the first two decades of the 19th century and under special conditions even much later.

Before ready money in this country became plentiful and when it was much more difficult to raise a thousand dollars than a million now, lotteries were often employed to help meet sudden emergencies such as rebuilding a bridge swept away or a paper mill consumed in flames, or to contribute toward long wanted improvements, such as constructing a steeple or lighthouse, repairing a road or removing obstacles to river navigation.

Lotteries are known to have been approved at one time or another and in one way or another by close to all of the leading Founding Fathers. Franklin introduced the big cash lotteries into Pennsylvania. Washington bought tickets again and again in lotteries he thought would serve a useful purpose, and when President of the United States he presented a ticket to a young child. Jefferson, a few months before his death in 1826, petitioned the Virginia legislature for a lottery grant to prevent the forced sale of Monticello.

Along with the approximate 400 lotteries set on foot to aid churches of the major denominations, one of which was drawn in 1810-13 to help pay the debts of Carlisle's German Reformed and German Lutheran congregations, certainly another of the most important and interesting groups was that run for educational institutions. Of the present-day American colleges which either taught subjects of collegiate grade before the end of the colonial period or were then rooted in the form of lower level schools, 12 participated in lotteries. Dickinson is one of the group and is in good company. The others are Brown, Columbia, Hampden-Sydney, Princeton, Rutgers, St. John's (at Annapolis), the University of Pennsylvania, William and Mary, Yale, and

Harvard. (Editor's Note: Harvard built two of its present dormitories, Stoughton Hall and Halworthy, from funds collected from lotteries it ran in 1805.)

If it is any comfort to the many persons opposed to all lotteries out of principle, they may be happy to know that Dickinson participated in the City Hall and Dickinson College Lottery only as an appendage, and furthermore, though the College trustees unstintingly joined in the enterprise, most likely they had not petitioned for legislative aid in this particular manner. Other persons may be happy to learn that Dickinson took part in what has become, historically, owing to the particular city hall involved, one of the outstanding lotteries ever run in the United States.

THE NEW federal Congress sitting in New York passed the so-called Residence Act, approved on July 16, 1790, by whose terms Philadelphia was designated the temporary national Capital for ten years commencing in December. While the decision dismayed New Yorkers, after all the trouble they had gone to in preparing their Federal Hall, to an equal degree it gratified Philadelphians to learn their city once again would become the seat of the national government.

It was understood that Congress would be accommodated in one of the public buildings on Chesnut (as it was then spelled) Street between 5th and 6th, the Independence Hall group. In the middle building the resolution for and the Declaration of Independence were adopted and there, 11 years later, the Constitution was threshed out. There is a tiny wing (neither original) on each side of the central building and beyond these, on the two corners of the block, are the other two main buildings.

The west building had been erected in 1787-89 for use as the county courthouse. For many years the lot on the east corner, owned by the city, had been reserved for a new city hall. Two important events early in 1789 impelled a group of prominent citizens to wait no longer. One was the completion of the courthouse, pointing up the need for the corresponding building on the other corner, and the other event was an act of the State legislature, passed on March 11, granting a new city charter and hence the persuasion that it was high time to get the new city hall built.

Only eight days after the act was passed, a representative in the Pennsylvania House sponsored a bill on behalf of this group of citizens for a lottery to raise $8000.00 gross to defray what must have been estimated as the main cost of the building. Although the House declined to grant permission for the bill to be read at the table, three days later, on March 22nd, it was so read for the first of the necessary three times.

It so happened that on the preceding February 5 a petition, now lost, had been received from the trustees of Dickinson College setting forth that their established annual income was deficient by upwards of £200 to pay the necessary expenses, and without further bounty the ends of the institution would be largely frustrated. Neither the minutes of the trustees nor of the legislature indicate the college asked specifically for a lottery.

On March 23 Thomas Fitzsimons introduced a motion in the House, seconded by George Clymer, a signer of the Declaration, to enlarge the proposed lottery bill by adding $2000 gross for Dickinson. On the 27th the amended bill was enacted into law with the name of the affair specified, "The City Hall and Dickinson College Lottery."

What motive induced Fitzsimons and Clymer, both representing Philadelphia, and the other legislators to increase by 25% the dollar volume of tickets to be sold? Obviously the legislature wanted to help the college. Assuming the trustees had not explicitly petitioned for a lottery grant, it can only be surmised aid was extended in this way to spare an additional drain upon the perennially burdened State treasury. But both Dickinson and Philadelphia probably benefited. As for the college, the authorized proceeds to accrue from the lottery may well have greatly exceeded any anticipated cash donation. And as for the city, the legislators favoring the lottery for the hall may well have brought in Dickinson on their own initiative to win needed votes and insure passage of the bill. In any case, Dickinson's participation would broaden interest in the enterprise beyond Philadelphia.

Of considerable importance, the minutes of the Philadelphia Common Council¹ conclusively prove the lottery was granted not to the private group of citizens who had petitioned for it, but to the city. The affair became officially a city lottery, with participation by Dickinson limited to its own self-interest in helping to get the tickets sold and then receiving its share of the profits.

One of the first steps taken by the managers, among whom was Richard Bache, Franklin's son-in-law, was to inform the legislature they did not like the scheme they had been directed to use. Consequently, another was authorized by a supplementary act passed on September 29 of the same year, 1789, consisting of 16,667 tickets at $4 each. If all of them were sold, the deduction of 15% from the proceeds would raise $10,000.20 gross for expenses and the beneficiaries, leaving the remainder for the net prizes.

The first newspaper advertisement of the lottery in Philadelphia appeared in the Packet of November 25. Surprisingly, in the customary appeal to buy tickets, less emphasis was placed upon the need for the city hall than the promising future usefulness of the college. It was pointed out, as seen in the accompanying reproduction, that the institution's "central situation, the respectable characters of its principal and professors, and the reputation it has already

All Prizes subject to a Deduction of 15 per Cent.

IT is to be hoped that a lottery instituted for the purposes of improving the capital of the state, and for promoting the interests of literature in its western parts, will meet with encouragement from the public. The college of Carlisle has already exhibited very promising appearances of future usefulness to the state. Its central situation, the respectable characters of its principal and professors, and the reputation it has already acquired for accurate and useful learning, render it an object worthy of general patronage in this, and the neighbouring states. Tickets may be had of the following persons in the city of Philadelphia; who are appointed by law, Managers of the Lottery, viz. Richard Bache, Francis Gurney, David Lenox, Phillip Wager and Thomas Forrest. Tickets are likewise to be had of the following persons in the country, viz. John Montgomery, John Creigh and Stephen Dunkan, Esquires, at Carlisle. The Rev. Mr. John King and Dr. Robert Johnston in Franklin county. The Rev. Messrs. John Black and Alexander Dobbins in York county. Joseph Montgomery, Esq; and the Rev. Mr. Snodgrass in Dauphin county. David Espy, Esq; in Bedford county. Alexander Scott, Esq; in Washington county, and Presly Nevill and Isaac Craig Esquires, at Fort Pitt in Alleghany county.

The drawing of the lottery it is to be hoped will commence on the first Wednesday in July next, or sooner if all the tickets are disposed of. m.w.f.

acquired for accurate and useful learning, render it an object worthy of general patronage in this, and the neighbouring states."

Tickets were to be had not only from the managers in Philadelphia but from a number of agents scattered over the State as far as Pittsburgh, including the Rev. John King and Dr. Robert Johnston in Franklin County, the Rev. John Black and the Rev. Alexander Dobbins in York County, and the Rev. James Snodgrass in Dauphin County. These and some others, the majority of the total, at the time were Dickinson trustees. It was hoped the drawing would commence by July 7.

MEANWHILE the city council on October 19 appointed a committee to prepare a plan and estimate the cost of erecting the city hall. The resulting report was read on February 1, 1790, and laid on the table. Not till July 12 was it read a second time. Thereupon another committee was appointed to report on the condition of the city treasury together with what could be borrowed on the corporation's credit. Apparently the council had been waiting, but in vain, for encouraging reports concerning the sale of the lottery tickets, and now, at last, had decided to go ahead with the building and hope for the best. In fact, the members at this time were advised by the lottery managers that in their opinion a resolution by the city to start the structure would greatly increase the sale.

On the 16th, which happened to be the day President Washington approved the act transferring the federal government to Philadelphia, the council learned that the Bank of North America (now merged into The First Pennsylvania Banking and Trust Company) would advance whatever sums might be necessary. With this good news the members concluded to stall no longer. They resolved to create a fund to defray the building costs, which would include the lottery money in the offing, and they also resolved to borrow money from the bank to anticipate these sums. And they appointed a new committee to superintend the erection of the building. One Samuel Wheeler offered to furnish the ironwork in exchange for 40 or 50 of the lottery tickets. By August 28 the foundations were almost ready.

Two days later another committee was appointed "to enquire which of the public Buildings are best calculated to accommodate Congress." On September 9 this committee handed in its report and on the same day the council for the first time resolved that the building to be fitted up for the reception of Congress would be in the county courthouse on the other corner.

The decision had been between that building and the city hall under construction. From July 17 into September, the lottery managers, with the drawing already postponed to September 7, had sought to activate the prospective adventurers by announcing that "as a spacious and elegant Hall will be necessary for their [Congress's] Accommodation—The Managers of the Lottery expect that all Friends to the Residence of that August Body in the metropolis of the United States, will be early in their Application for Tickets, and zealous in promoting the Sale, so as to enable the Corporation to go on with the Building this Fall."²

² Pennsylvania Packet, July 17-Sept. 11, 1790. Excerpt is taken from Aug. 5 issue, in which a trifling and irrelevant alteration in the text commences.

Contrary to what has been written, this was a bona fide statement. Up to September 9 the managers could not know otherwise than that the building to be erected mostly from the profits of their lottery might be the one chosen as the temporary Capitol of the United States.

The compelling reason why the projected city hall was ruled out as the home of Congress must have arisen when the council realized the building could not be completed in time. Under the date November 2 Christopher Marshall wrote in his diary that he had watched "a New Method of raising the timber for roof of New City Hall with tackle and 3 Horses—with great expedition & Safety." Luckily the council voted against the building because it was still unfinished the following February. Meanwhile Congress had first convened in the courthouse on December 6. The members continued to occupy the edifice, known today as Congress Hall, till they removed to Washington.

AFTER THE drawing had failed to commence on September 7, 1790, the second announced date, the Dickinson trustees resolved on the 29th, as a means of helping the sale, to purchase 50 of the tickets at the risk of the institution.³ But this was only a drop in the bucket. Thousands of tickets remained unsold. A letter was published in one of the papers on October 21 from a woman asking when the drawing would commence. Her husband had given her a ticket and "it vexes me that I should have to wait so long for a prize."⁴

Several months later, with the lottery approaching a moribund state, the council members reached the crossroads where they had to commit themselves either to draw it or abandon it. On February 28, 1791, they came to a tentative decision and on March 28 to a final one. The drawing would commence on April 19. To transfuse blood into the affair, they appointed a committee to take from the managers four-fifths of the unsold tickets up to 2000. The committeemen were empowered "to sell from Time to Time so many of the said Tickets, during the drawing of the Lottery, as they shall judge most for the Benefit of the City-Hall." In other words, the City of Philadelphia concluded out of necessity to peddle its own lottery tickets.

It was a crucial decision of the council's to set a peremptory date for the wheels to commence turning. The few thousand dollars that might be required to cover the cost of the unsold tickets should have been earmarked to pay the bank loan. If the lottery were drawn with thousands of such tickets on hand (the number is not known), and if they failed to win anywhere near their share of the prize money, the city might find itself for the time being destitute, unable to meet its obligations. Accordingly, the council faced a dilemma. Should it, right then on March 28, 1791, commit itself to gamble, perhaps heavily, and perhaps lose heavily, or should it play safe, shrink from setting a final date for the drawing and thus turn adventurers away, perhaps for good? It decided to take the chance.

So important was the decision regarded that it was the only one in the first volume of the council minutes under the new charter, covering a period of more than three years, in which the individual yeas and nays were recorded. In addition to the mayor and recorder, of the eight aldermen present, seven voted in the affirmative, including John Nixon, who had proclaimed the Declaration on July 8, 1776. Among the 19 common councilmen present, 12 voted in favor, including John Dunlap, one of the city's leading newspaper publishers, and Jared Ingersoll, a recent signer of the federal constitution.

The lottery was first drawn, as last scheduled, on April 19, 1791, at the State House, in the large room where the Declaration had been adopted and signed. The 22nd and last day's drawing took place on May 19. Ordinarily the managers of the old lotteries needed several months or more to settle their accounts and turn the bulk of the profits over to the beneficiary. In this one, so great apparently was the need for funds, in less than seven weeks, on July 5, the council appointed a committee to call upon the managers to obtain what money they could.

During the fiscal year ending June 1, 1792, the managers turned over to the corporation £2758 13s ($7356.40) net, of which the city paid "on account of City-Hall" £1976 15s 9½d ($5271.44).⁵ Two problems immediately arise, neither of which, owing to lost records, can be solved. (1) Since more often than not it took years for managers to collect scattered residual sums due on tickets sold on credit, did the city receive any further small balance? (2) According to the act granting the lottery, after the managers paid the prizes and all expenses they were directed to turn the balance over to the city council, which was then directed to pay to the Dickinson trustees a fifth of the net proceeds. But according to the council minutes of July 5, just referred to, the committee appointed to call upon the managers was directed to receive "such Proportion of the Money . . . as belongs to this Corporation." The problem, then, is, did the £2758 13s include the fifth part for Dickinson or was this paid directly by the managers? If the sum included the college's share, then, with $7356.40 net raised out of the full potential gross avails of $10,000, the lottery may be considered reasonably successful, but if the $7356.40 represented only the city's share, the lottery may rightly be characterized as a huge success.

For those who wonder what it was all about, why less than $7500 should have consumed so much energy in running what was still the largest city in the country, in the first place the money paid for nearly half of the cost of the building, close to $15,095.64, that has been wanted for a generation, and in the second place, for comparison, the total corporation receipts for that fiscal year, including the lottery receipts, were only £15,519 17s 2½d.

It follows that Dickinson must have received its proportionate fifth share, but how much was it? Depending upon the above uncertainties, as well as the unknown fate of the 50 tickets, the least amount, in the highly improbable event not one of them won a prize, must have been no less than $1271, but the sum may well have been around $1810. In any event, the profit could hardly have soured the trustees on this method of raising money, for early in 1794 they petitioned specifically for a lottery, though in vain, to raise $7000.⁶

Although the college's financial records for the period are largely missing, a receipt has survived showing that the Rev. Robert Davidson, pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Carlisle and at the time Dickinson's outstanding faculty member and a future president, was paid on July 4, 1791, $210 "on account of the lottery, as part of Salary as Professor in said College."⁷

WITH BOTH Houses of Congress accommodated in the courthouse and with the State Assembly ensconced in the State House, quarters had to be provided for the United States Supreme Court. It was arranged for the Justices to occupy a room in the new City Hall. With John Jay presiding as Chief Justice, the Court moved into the building on August 1, 1791, and remained there till it removed to Washington in 1800. The city government continued to occupy the building till 1895. The Old City Hall, now called the Supreme Court Building, is currently administered by the National Park Service as a unit of the Independence National Historical Park.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

"Philip Nordell," according to Whitfield J. Bell, Jr., '35, associate librarian of the American Philosophical Society, "knows more about lotteries than anyone else in this country."

About himself, the author says that he was graduated from Dartmouth in 1916 and for many years was engaged in business in New York City. He now resides in Gwynedd Valley, Pa. For the past 15 years, he has given full time to the study of American lotteries and nearly completed a history of them. Many years ago, he had several magazine articles published on the New England Puritans. During the last ten years a half dozen articles pertaining to American lotteries have appeared in leading periodicals.

Dean of Admissions

Dickinson College began this year's academic activity with an entering class of 363 freshmen, 11 foreign students and 18 transfer students. The freshman class was selected from more than 2000 applicants representing almost all the states and a score of foreign countries. The registered students represent 261 secondary schools in the United States and other countries. Seventy-four percent of the students were graduates of public high schools and 26 percent graduated from independent private schools.

The admissions staff processed more than 42,000 pieces of correspondence and conducted interviews with more than 1400 prospective students and their parents (Provost Gilbert "Red" Malcolm was extremely helpful!) in the quest for representative Dickinsonians. Five hundred and eighty students were offered spaces and 368 students registered. One-half of the girls and one-fourth of the boys were registered under the early decision plan in which all applications were submitted by December 1. The remainder of the class was registered following regular application by March 1.

Benjamin D. Giorgio, '62, replaced Joseph Carver, '59, as assistant to the Dean of Admissions. Joe has accepted a position as Associate Director of Admissions at the Philadelphia Museum College of Art and will begin graduate study at Temple University. Ben will visit secondary schools and plans to visit with Dickinsonians on his travels.

The Admissions Office is working with the Alumni Secretary in developing a program of having alumni represent Dickinson in secondary schools throughout the country.

The members of the Class of 1966 have a rich background in talent, leadership and activities. Many of the freshmen have been active in the extra curricular program including the areas of music, drama, athletics, publications, government, etc. Their contribution in these fields will be awaited with high expectation.

Twenty-seven members of the class are sons or daughters of alumni. Five of these students are children of Dickinson couples.

The academic background of the class shows a high potential for a satisfactory collegiate experience. Seventy percent of the girls graduated in the upper 10% of their class and 40% of the men had the same record. Ninety percent of the girls and 70% of the boys were in the upper fifth of their graduating class. The median scores on the College Board Scholastic Aptitude Tests were in the 600 area. A goodly number of the class received advanced placement and 15 students received credit for advanced work achieved while in secondary school.

ALUMNI CHILDREN

The Alumnus is proud to present the twenty-seven members of the Class of 1966 who are sons and daughters of Dickinsonians. In addition to the students pictured here, seven other members of the Class have uncles or cousins who preceded them to Dickinson. John Dann, from Wilmington, Delaware is a direct descendant of John A. Mason, President of Dickinson College from 1821-24. The applications of many of the young men and women who entered in September reveal the names of Dickinsonians who are teachers, ministers and neighbors who have recommended Dickinson. One measure of an institution is its products. The College can take pride when its alumni are sufficiently satisfied with their experience on the campus to recommend it to high school students who are looking at colleges.

Here, then is the newest addition to the growing Dickinson family, who like their parents and grandparents before them have chosen Dickinson as their Alma Mater.

Not pictured here are Robin Baron, son of Herbert A. Baron, '31, and John W. Pedlow, II, son of John W. Pedlow, '29.

AROUND THE CAMPUS

THE LARGEST student body in the long history of the College is enrolled at Dickinson this term. There are 1,144 full-time students, eighty more than last year. In addition, there are 62 special students. The largest-ever freshman class numbers 363, selected from over 2,000 applicants. At the direction of President Rubendall, Dickinson is opening its doors to more foreign students than in the past. Eleven young men and women from overseas came to the campus this Fall, the largest foreign-student group ever admitted at one time. Three are from Singapore, two from Hong Kong and one each from Thailand, Morocco, Ethiopia, Iraq, Germany and Honduras. With such a large student body, there is some overcrowding in the dormitories but not much. The College found rooms in private homes near the campus for the 50 male students it could not accommodate on campus.

Dickinson is among six colleges awarded a Ford Foundation grant of $180,000 for a two-year cooperative program of faculty study in Asian cultures. The other colleges are Gettysburg, Hood, Mount Saint Mary's, St. Joseph's (Md.) and Western Maryland. The intent of the plan is to increase faculty competence and curriculum offerings in important non-Western areas. The initial phase of the three-phase program was carried out the past summer when selected members of the faculties did prescribed reading. These professors will carry a light teaching load this term, devoting the remainder of their time preparing for 12 seminars to be conducted by visiting experts. To complete the training program, the professors will spend next summer at a major graduate center in this country or travel to one of the nations under study. The participating Dickinson teachers are Donald W. Flaherty, political science, and Henry W. Seaford, sociology. The plan, worked out by the six colleges in consultation with the Asian Society, is their joint response to the demands of the contemporary world for broader study and greater understanding of the Asian cultures. In addition to the Ford grant, the program will be financed by $73,000 in funds provided by the colleges.

Dickinson has received a National Science Foundation institutional grant of $5,570 in support of the science program of the College. Institutional grants are given to certain colleges and universities as a means of strengthening their ability to create new scientific knowledge and to educate scientists and engineers essential to national well-being. Only those schools which received basic research grants from the Foundation during the previous year were eligible for the grants.

Faculty

Columbia University's 1962 annual English Institute, devoted to study of advanced problems in literature, was attended by William Sloane, English, by invitation. An article by Dr. Sloane on the 17th century poet, George Herbert, was carried in a recent issue of Notes and Queries, monthly magazine published in England.

Graduate Study in the Liberal Arts College, a 182-page descriptive and evaluative study by Benjamin D. James, '34, of the Dickinson faculty and Frederic W. Ness, '33, a former dean of the College and now a vice-president of Hofstra, was published in mid-summer by the Association of American Colleges and widely distributed. Based upon a two-year, far-flung survey financed by the Lilly Endowment, Inc., and made by Dr. James in the pursuit of his doctorate at the University of Pennsylvania, which conferred the degree last spring, the book describes the nature and scope of the graduate programs at some 150 private liberal arts colleges and sets forth criteria for the maintenance and improvement of their quality.

Everyone interested in the world of numbers is sure to find many hours of stimulating entertainment in Mathematics for Pleasure, a book by William H. Benson, Dickinson's registrar, and Oswald Jacoby, the noted bridge expert. Released in July by the McGraw-Hill Book Co., Inc., it contains some 150 theories, games, puzzles and oddities of all kinds. The co-authors have been warm friends since 1950 when they met in Tokyo while serving at Naval headquarters for the Far East. Prof. Benson was then Capt. Benson, USN, and Mr. Jacoby was a commander in the Naval Reserves.

M. Benton Naff, chemistry, participated in a national program as one of the writers of the American Chemical Society's cooperative examinations in organic chemistry. The past summer he was among a selected group of college science teachers called to Florida for a two-week nuclear program designed to advance their knowledge in areas that have an important part in the development of science.

Andrew C. Houston, economics, was among the college and university economists brought together in Chicago for four weeks last summer for a seminar dealing with recent developments in applied economics.

Charles Flint Kellogg, chairman of the Department of History, was promoted to the rank of professor in June. Others advanced to this rank were Francis W. Warlow, English; David I. Gleim, chemistry; Margaret M. Ramos, modern languages, and Walter M. Miller, mathematics. Advanced to associate professor were Heber R. Harper, political science; Daniel J. McDonald and William B. Jeffries, biology, and Katharine A. Bonney, philosophy and religion. To assistant professor: Barbara B. McDonald, biology; Diane I. Dewis, modern languages; Harold R. Gillespie, Jr., John W. Doebler and Bettie Anne Doebler, English, and Martha C. Carson, library staff.

Faculty tenure has been granted to Richard H. Wanner, education and philosophy; Henry J. Young, history; James W. Carson, history, and David F. Brubaker, English, the director of drama. All are assistant professors except Wanner who is an associate professor.

Katharine A. Bonney, philosophy and religion, participated in Union Theological Seminary's six-week Visiting Scholar Program last summer. Only full-time college teachers with Ph.D.'s are eligible for the program, which permitted Dr. Bonney to do research and audit courses under noted philosophers.

A grant from the Church Society for College Work enabled Henry J. Young, history, to attend the five-week Faculty Summer School in Cambridge, Mass., where he utilized the libraries of Harvard University and Episcopal Theological School in research on European church history of the 16th and 17th centuries.

Students

TOP SCHOLARS in the Senior Class are Nancy Arndt, Abington, Pa.; Barbara Geyer, Wynnewood, Pa.; John McClelland, Haddon Heights, N. J.; Thomas Stretton, Clarks Summit, Pa.; and John Standing, Bethlehem, Pa. They were elected to membership in Phi Beta Kappa last June and initiated this month. Nancy's father is John C. Arndt, III, '31. Elizabeth is the daughter of Elizabeth Bassett Geyer, '33. McClelland and Stretton are the only members of the class to have maintained the maximum 4.0 average through the first three years of their college work. They are the Senior Sophisters.

Alpha Chi Rho led the fraternities and Phi Mu the sororities last term in the percentage of members having achieved 3.5 averages or better for the term. Appropriately engraved plaques were given to the leaders by Phi Beta Kappa, which also presented recognized Phi Epsilon Pi and Zeta Tau Alpha as the groups whose freshmen had the highest average.

The brilliant academic record made at Dickinson by William F. Weigle, who graduated in June, earned him no less than seven scholarships for medical school, including a Pennsylvania Senatorial Scholarship. Another was the Ashton Scholarship of the University of Pennsylvania Medical School.

William Morgan, of Kingston, Pa., a senior majoring in Spanish, spent six weeks in Mexico last summer in study and travel financed by a Carnegie Foundation grant.

Serving as a residence this term for eight senior men who are doing honors work in the handsome former Jackson property, 42 North College Street. A house set aside exclusively for superior students is a new thing at Dickinson and quite definitely an experiment—to see whether students who may have only scholarship in common at the outset and interested in different academic disciplines can live together harmoniously and, in terms of their development and the College's academic program, profitably. Since there are no house rules imposed by the College, it is likewise an experiment in self-government. It is also a tangible reward by the College for academic excellence. The Honors House, as it is called, is nicely furnished by the College. There are five spacious bedrooms on the second floor. One of the two very large rooms downstairs is furnished with desks and other equipment for study and the other serves as a lounge for entertaining visitors and a meeting place. This use of the Jackson property, which virtually stood idle after its purchase by the College two years ago, was conceived by the faculty and is warmly supported by President Rubendall. Honors work is the most demanding academic program offered by Dickinson to students willing to go the "extra mile." It is restricted to seniors who have at least a 3.25 average in their major field of study and at least a 2.50 overall average.

On May 13 the Epsilon Delta chapter of the Spanish honorary fraternity, Sigma Delta Pi, was established at Dickinson with the initiation of eight charter members. Pictured here are: (front row) William Morgan (treasurer), Bonnie Brown (president), Dr. James O. Swain (National officer from the University of Tennessee who installed the chapter), Carol Jones (secretary). (back row) Professor Ferdinando Maurino, Professor Roberto Ruiz, Professor George Edberg, Caroline Tuttle, Professor Dianne Dewis, Karen Johnson, Al Miller, Nancy Arndt, Professor William Wishmeyer, Richard Warden, Professor Margaret Ramos, and Professor William Kirk.

Loveman Award

Walter Rosenstein: First Amy Loveman Award Winner

IT ALL happened at once to young Walter Rosenstein of Forest Hills, New York. He got married, graduated from Dickinson College, and captured the $1,000 Amy Loveman Award (SR, Jan. 13, 1962) in a new national contest sponsored by the Book-of-the-Month Club, the Women's National Book Association, and the Saturday Review for the most outstanding personal library; and all within a period of three months.

Fifty-two colleges and universities across the land conducted preliminary contests among seniors, who, to compete, had to submit twenty-five-word annotations on each of the books in their respective libraries. Out of these emerged profiles of the individual libraries and their owners; and from them the profile most to the liking of Judges Rosemary Benét, John Winterich, Eleanor Smith, Ben Grauer, and Harry Hart was the Rosenstein. They agreed that his annotations showed an independence of (though not a rebellion against) faculty opinion that was both refreshing and original. Their decision was based also on the growth factors inherent in Rosenstein's collection.

"My library is an organic thing," Rosenstein wrote in his presentation. "My ideal would resemble New York's Forty-Second Street Library on a smaller scale. It would contain the finest works in every field of human knowledge. It would have all the works of the great modern novelists from Flaubert to Salinger; the poets, starting with Baudelaire; the dramatists, beginning with Ibsen. These would predominate; but my interests are hardly exclusive, and I would have works on archeology, anthropology, philosophy, psychology, history, art, politics, biography, and music.

"I am by no means a Renaissance man. I have little interest in science or architecture and I paint poorly; but I am curious about almost everything. It may be more profitable to know a great deal on one subject, but it is quite limiting. I prefer being a Jack-of-all-books."

During a visit to SR Rosenstein discussed some of his peak reading experiences. Hemingway is "the greatest because one can read him on many different levels," Salinger "the best of the postwar writers." He described Fitzgerald's "Tender Is the Night" as "structurally not as fine as 'Gatsby' but deeper and richer and better." . . . "Matthew G. Lewis's 'The Monk' is one of the great novels of the eighteenth century." . . . "Turgenev is the only Russian novelist that I've truly enjoyed." . . . "Oscar Wilde has been an especial favorite ever since I was sixteen. He wears well." . . . "Turnbull's work on Fitzgerald is one of the best biographies I've ever read." . . . "Faulkner suffers from verbal dysentery." . . . "Norman Mailer's work, with the exception of 'The Naked and the Dead,' is a kind of inferiority complex on parade."

What books does he plan to add to his collection during the coming months? Salinger's "Franny and Zooey," "Picasso's Picassos," The "Cantos" of Ezra Pound, the "Collected Writings" of Ambrose Bierce, Gertrude Stein's "The Making of Americans," Maxwell Anderson's "Winesburg, Ohio," James Baldwin's "Nobody Knows My Name," "The Annotated Alice in Wonderland," Tolstoy's "War and Peace," John Dos Passos's "U.S.A."

Professor Frank Warlow, poet, short story writer, and LaCrosse champion, is responsible for having lit the fuse that launched Rosenstein, as a sophomore, into the book-collecting orbit. One year after studying with Warlow ("the most brilliant man I've ever met"), Rosenstein the reader branched out into editing, first as a staffer, and later as editor of the Dickinson quarterly, Hornbook. A year later he took the icy plunge into creative writing. Classically, he now has a bathroom plastered with rejection slips, but is still sufficiently ardent about writing to turn down a job grinding out promotion copy for a news magazine. "I'd rather sweep floors."

Because he has worked as bus boy and elevator operator during summers, we wondered if he had had to sacrifice substantially to finance his library. "Just once: when I bought 'My Brother' by Hemingway's brother instead of a case of beer. . . . I should have bought the beer." —MARY KERSEY HARVEY.

THE OUTCOME of the 1962 football season at Dickinson hinges largely on the state of health of a squad woefully weak in replacements for the thirteen lettermen—ten seniors and three juniors—who must “carry the ball.” Virtually no help has come from last year’s freshman group. Only one freshman, Patrick Keating, won a letter last season and he has entered West Point.

In Reno DiOrio, the captain and quarterback, Dickinson has one of its finest offensive players in years. He paced the 1961 team in rushing yardage and total offense and captured the individual scoring title of the Middle Atlantic Conference Southern College Division.

With DiOrio in the backfield are two fleet but light halfbacks, Dick Warden, 180, and Dan Shaver, 170, and a hard-driving fullback, Lou Verdelli. The coaches are fortunate in having a second fine quarterback in Walt Buckley, an excellent passer. DiOrio moves to halfback when Buckley is brought into the games.

Guards Millard Shoff and Bill Smith and center Lou Mazzie provide Dickinson with a strong middle line, which is flanked by tackles Alan Creps, 210, and Thomas Jacks, 190, and ends Harry Packard and Peter Zuyus.

All of the above mentioned players are lettermen. Beyond them are freshmen and fortunately this year’s frosh crop has more potential than last year’s.

Assisting Coaches Donald Seibert and Wib Gobrecht this year is Lee Shipman, co-captain and guard of the 1958 Dickinson team, who is a first-year student at the Dickinson School of Law.

“The squad is very willing, worked hard in pre-season training and if it stays sound it will give a good account of itself,” said Coach Seibert on the eve of the opening game with Swarthmore.

Coach Joe DuCharme has six lettermen for his cross-country team for the demanding eleven-meet schedule, the longest Dickinson ever has had in this sport. William White, a junior, is the captain but the runner likely to score the heaviest is a newcomer to cross-country, Gordon Faulkner, a sophomore, whose only previous experience in running was last spring’s track campaign when he was undefeated in the two-mile race in dual meets. Lettermen besides Capt. White are William Alfred, James Hatch, Alan Medaugh, Michael Nemeec and Lewis Wilson.

Colleges and Secondary Schools announced early this summer that it has reaffirmed the accreditation of Dickinson College.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

(Editor's Note: While this letter was not directed to the editor, we include it in this column with the thought that it would be of interest to our readers and might bring forth other opinions on this issue)

To the Financial Vice President:

After reading this article (March 31, 1962 issue of Section III of “Human Events” Bulletin, 410 First Street, S. E., Washington 3, D. C.) I thought I should send it to you. This article pretty much sums up my feelings of Federal Aid to Education. No matter how denied, I feel that Federal Aid to Education opens the door to Federal control. If the government provides the money it would be irresponsible if they did not set standards for its use—here is the start of bureaucratic national control—I feel local, private control is not only right but absolutely necessary if we are not going to eventually succumb to the national move towards mediocrity, conformatism, and statism.

Herbert Denlinger '51

Fanwood, New Jersey

(and the reply from the Financial Vice President)

Dear Herb:

I appreciate very much having you send me the article from “Human Events” and also the expression of your feelings concerning Federal aid to education.

It is always good to have alumni express their opinions on these matters, because it helps us in formulating our own thinking.

As you know, we have constructed one dormitory with Federal funds, and it is on a forty-year repayment basis. We also have under construction another dormitory under a Federal loan program. This is a women’s residence hall.

We are also receiving National Defense Student Loans which enable some worthy and needy students to attend Dickinson College. There are many other ways in which we are receiving aid from the Government, but outside of completing and submitting a number of forms, we do not have an indication of Federal control in any way.

George Shuman, Jr.

Financial Vice President
