KLINE FOUNDATION GIFT

The Josiah W. and Bessie H. Kline Foundation of Harrisburg has given Dickinson College $500,000. The gift in late September raised the total of the College's campaign for the Life/Sports Learning Center to $3.4 million. The goal is $5 million in this first phase.

William J. Stuart, Dickinson trustee and chairman of the College's capital development campaign, announced the gift during the fall meeting of the Board of Trustees.

"We are deeply grateful to the Kline Foundation," President Sam A. Banks told board members. "Their generosity typifies their dedication to private higher education."

William S. Masland, board president, said the gift will affect Dickinson students and area residents for generations.

"Mr. Kline was born and raised in the Carlisle area," said Masland. "A builder and developer in every sense of the words, he pioneered the first shopping center in Harrisburg in 1951. In that context, the design and theme of Dickinson's Life/Sports Learning Center seem particularly appropriate."

The Center will be the first building of its kind in central Pennsylvania; its hyperbolic paraboloid roof spans 86,000 square feet of floor area without interior support. Not only providing athletic and recreational facilities for the College, the center will seat 5000 people and will be the largest auditorium in the Carlisle area.

THE WEATHERVANE

Woody Allen once wrote that a griffin has the head of a lion and the body of a lion, but that they are different lions.

Various dictionaries and encyclopedias say the griffin has the head and wings of an eagle and the body of a lion.

I'm not sure just what that makes the fellow on the front of this magazine since he seems to have the head and body of a lion and the wings of an eagle. But then, at an institution where a triton evolved into a mermaid, anything can happen. We could call it creative mythology, Dickinson style.

At any rate, our "whatever" graced Bosler Hall back in the days when Bosler sported a red stone cover and assorted towers and turrets. Some readers may remember mention in an earlier issue (May 1977) of the cartouche which also once decorated Bosler.

Griffins originated in ancient Middle East legend and were thought to have been a protective symbol, representing strength and vigilance. The Bosler monster obviously did his duty well for a number of years.

The cartouche came out of storage, but the griffin never found a new home on the campus. Now he seems to have disappeared completely. Architectural styles change, and griffins have not been much in demand.

The Dickinson campus continues to change. As our new Life/Sports Learning Center illustrates, only the limestone is the same.

By the way, the cover picture comes from a stereoptican slide found in the archives.

Do "Chips" Count?

Dickinson had its largest number of freshman applications of this decade for the 1979 fall term—2410, representing almost a 33 percent increase since 1975.

Academic quality of the entering freshmen has remained stable in terms of SAT means and class ranks. While SAT means are down slightly compared to 1975, the class rank profile has improved. Verbal and math SAT means of the class entering for fall 1979 are 536 and 570 respectively, compared to 540 and 572 for the class which entered in 1978. As this is written (July 30, 1979) 42 percent of the freshman rank in the top tenth of their secondary school class and 72 percent in the top quintile—a slight improvement over last year. The retention rate for recent freshman classes has been extremely high, representing a very stable and healthy picture of the College.

The success experienced in admissions in recent years, in light of increasing competition and a decreasing population of 18 year olds, a factor which will be even more critical in the 1980's, is a classic example of the Dickinson community in action. Admissions officers are responsible for originating ideas and programs, but in order for the ideas and programs to be successful they have to be supported and funded by President Banks, the senior staff, and ultimately the Dickinson trustees.

An equally important part of the admissions operation is the very substantial assistance received from the faculty, Dickinson students, the administration, and the alumni. Dickinson alumni are important to the admissions health of the College. Not only do they, through the Alumni Admissions Program (AAP) and other college organizations, provide support, but they also can become an excellent source of prospective students as their children approach college age. The AAP is a success because of the dedication, loyalty, and much time which members of the program have given to recruitment efforts.

We are often asked whether any preference is given in the admissions process to offspring and relatives of Dickinson alumni. The answer is a definite "yes". The Admissions Committee gives preference in admissions to all chips on an

On an everything-else-being-equal basis, yes, they do.

"everything else being equal" basis. (A chip is the internal term for any applicant who is related to a graduate of Dickinson College.) Very close track of chips is kept through the entire admissions process, and their applications are handled with much sensitivity and care.

When reviewing applications for admission many factors are reviewed and scrutinized. The most important factors relate to academic achievement, motivation and abilities, character recommendations, and citizenship qualities.

Academic achievement, motivation, and capabilities are best defined in terms of the following:

1. The actual grades which a student has achieved and the pattern of the grades through secondary school.
2. The quality of school from which the student comes.
3. The types of courses taken in order to achieve the grades. For example: Has the student taken the most advanced courses for which he or she was eligible in secondary school?

4. Class rank when measured against the quality of program and school in which it is compiled.
5. SAT's are an important factor in the admissions process but not the most important factor unless they are abnormally low compared to the means of Dickinson students.

We have a responsibility to the entire Dickinson community including present students, faculty, administrators, and alumni to admit students of strong character. Therefore, character recommendations are extremely important. The Admissions Committee will not admit a student for whom an official recommendation from either the counselor, principal, or headmaster has not been submitted. Although not required, teacher recommendations and recommendations from friends of the family, including alumni, can be helpful as a supplement to the primary recommendations.

Citizenship in terms of extra curricular in-school participation, community service, and/or work experiences all help round out the profile of an applicant. Because Dickinson is community and participatory-centered, the Admissions Committee is looking for students who will contribute to the community. The number of activities is not what is important. It is the quality of participation as shown by leadership, personal growth, and responsibility developed from such participation which is, for example, an applicant who works 30 hours a week in order to supplement family income often demonstrates as much citizenship in that endeavor as a person who is student council president or yearbook editor.

What does the above mean in relation to chips? It means that out of a highly qualified applicant pool, preference is given in the admissions process to chips who possess the overall characteristics of academic success, citizenship, and character. As a general guideline those applicants from public schools who rank in the top fifth of their class and who possess scores of 500 or higher on each of the verbal and math SAT's stand the best chance (although by no means a guaranteed opportunity) of admission. Students from high quality private schools or superb public schools (ie: schools that traditionally send over 90 percent of their graduates to four-year private colleges) who rank in the top two-fifths of their class, with SAT's similar to the ones described above, are considered equally to have the best chance for admission. Admission standards are high. The equally high retention rate of students at Dickinson bears out the necessity for them. Research continuously points to the fact that students with abnormally low SAT's or class ranks are those most likely to experience academic problems at Dickinson.

Although we are very aware of the sensitive feelings and anxieties of Dickinson alumni when their relatives apply to the College, our foremost ethical and professional consideration in the admissions process must be what is in the best interest of the applicant. It is far more traumatic for a student to fail at Dickinson than not to be admitted in the first place. By failing Dickinson, the person not only must deal with that trauma but inevitably will find it very difficult, if not impossible, to gain admission into another reputable college. That is at the heart of our concern in making professional judgments that are in the best interest of the applicant. Occasionally, we may have to disappoint the applicant's parents or relatives with a denial of admission.

Slightly over 11 percent of the fall 1979 freshman class at Dickinson is made up of relatives of Dickinson alumni, compared to just under nine percent the previous year. Thirty-eight percent rank in the top-tenth, sixty-nine percent rank in the top-fifth and ninety-five percent rank in the top two-fifths of their secondary school class.

The SAT verbal mean for the chips is 531 and the math mean is 565. These statistics are below the overall class statistics, indicating some preference in the admissions process. However, it should be stated clearly that these students merited admission and are fully capable of enjoying success at Dickinson.

There is a sharp delineation between the academic statistics of the entering chips and those who were rejected for admission. For example, the SAT verbal and math means, respectively, for rejected chips were 479 and 482. The class ranks were equally low compared to the overall class norms of the incoming freshmen.

In summary, alumni children and relatives are extremely important to Dickinson, and the Admissions Committee continues to look forward to admitting all of those who have the appropriate academic and non-academic credentials necessary to have a positive Dickinson experience.

J. LARRY MENCH has been Dickinson's director of admissions since 1974. He received his B.A. and M.A. degrees at Oberlin College.

Twelve New H. L. Mencken Letters¹

Bruce Morton

Reposited in the Boyd Lee Spahr Library at Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pennsylvania are twelve previously unpublished H. L. Mencken letters. The letters, written to Charles Lowe Swift between the years 1908 and 1923 are most interesting, in some ways important, and in every way entertaining—vintage Mencken.

Two volumes of Mencken letters have been published: Letters of H. L. Mencken edited by Guy J. Forgue (New York: Knopf, 1961) and The New Mencken Letters edited by Carl Bode (New York: Dial, 1977). Neither of these volumes contains any letters addressed to Charles L. Swift. Therefore, the publication of these letters brings to attention a correspondence heretofore unnoted by Mencken scholars in correspondence or biographical studies. The addition of the Mencken-Swift letters to the existing corpus of Mencken correspondence serves to flesh-out years for which very little correspondence is available: the two letters dated 1908 join three letters for that year published in Bode; three letters dated 1909 join five letters for that year, two in Bode and three in Forgue; two letters dated 1911 complement ten, one in Bode and nine in Forgue; the single letter dated 1912 joins eight letters for that year, three in Bode and five in Forgue; one letter dated 1913 adds to a year represented by three letters in Bode and six in Forgue. The remaining three Mencken-Swift letters, two dated 1914 and one dated 1923 are less striking in this respect since they join a substantial body of correspondence extant for those years in Bode and Forgue.

The letters themselves are revelatory of Mencken's personality within the context of a non-literary friendship. He tells Swift of the pressures of a heavy and constant workload, banter about carousing, chides Swift in regard to the domestic constraints of matrimony—this with a bit of poignancy—and renders a classic Mencken statement on academe.

The relationship between Mencken and Charles Lowe Swift which strips these letters of all formality is grounded in the years 1903-1905. At that time Mencken was, first, City Editor of the Baltimore Evening Herald and, then, Editor of the Evening Herald and Swift was variously reporter, Sunday Editor, and Real Estate Editor on Mencken's staff. Swift had left Dickinson College in 1903 at the end of his junior year in order to pursue, at the age of twenty-five, a career as a journalist, thereby coming under the tutelage of Mencken. It is obvious from Mencken's letters to Swift that his instruction to the fledgling journalist was not restricted to the City Room. Mencken's allusion in Letter 2 to a "new" club, suggests that Swift was, at least on occasion, a participant at the Saturday evening sessions of the Stevedores' club. The club was so named because of its members' proclivity for unloading schooners of beer. During this period at the Herald Swift was somewhat ironically dubbed by Mencken, the "Puritan"—certainly because of his New Bedford, Massachusetts heritage. However, there might have been some intentional irony in this appellation since Swift enjoyed a reputation of being a "man's man" and raconteur of note.

Swift left the Herald at its demise in 1905 and then did stints as a drama writer for the Baltimore News and as an editorial writer for the Baltimore Telegram during 1905-1906 and then transferred to the New York Tribune before deciding to become a teacher. In 1906 Swift became a member of the faculty of Conway Hall, the preparatory school associated with Dickinson College in Carlisle, Pennsylvania. In 1909 Swift became Dean of Conway Hall and acquired the nickname "Dean" which would remain his for the rest of his life. Swift remained at Conway Hall until 1912, and it is to this address that Letters 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 8, and presumably 3 are written. In 1912 Swift left Conway Hall to undertake graduate study in English at Yale University. Leaving Yale in 1913 he went to teach at The Hill School in Pottstown, Pennsylvania. It is to Swift at The Hill School that Letters 10, 11, 12, and presumably 9 are addressed. Swift would leave The Hill School in 1935 in order to accept an appointment to the faculty of Dickinson College as an Associate Professor of English, and would remain there until his retirement in 1947. The following year he would be elected a trustee of the College. Swift spent his retirement years in New Bedford, Massachusetts where he died in 1956.

I have transcribed each of Mencken's letters word for word, line for line. The letters, numbered 1-12, are arranged chronologically. Annotation is numbered consecutively throughout all letters, referring to endnotes.

Dear Swift:—

By gar, I am delighted! If the enclosed overlooks any important point, edit ruthlessly and send it back, and I'll make you a fair copy at no extra charge. Tell them that I am the most sapient literary critic since the editors of the Old Testament. If need be, I'll offer affidavits.

I wish to God I could run up to Carlisle for a day or so, but the S. S.² is loading me with work. I hope to sail for Bremen April 16. In order to get six or seven weeks free, I must do three book articles in advance, four articles for a new department—and an extra article on Baltimore! A lovely prospect. I work 28 hours a day.

My best regards to Prince.³

Dear Swift:—

God knows I wish I could—but all sorts of rotten jobs pile up. I am trying to get enough stuff ahead to escape April 1st to Munich, there to drink the waters for two weeks. Their curative properties are justly esteemed. Many patients, however, drink them to exceed. I myself, on advice of my surgeon, shall limit my gobbling to 20 seidels a day.

Mr dear Swift:—

Thanks for your note and the Prince book.⁴ Some day I'll surprise you by appearing in your midst in the habiliments of virtue. Meanwhile, I look forward to the book. My glance through it leads me to feel sure that Mr. Prince will be hailed with joy by Dreiser. Altogether their coming together should be for the good of both. And you, Brute—what of you?

Why don't you write a book? A novel, by heck! Or a book of criticism! —But remember that you must avoid orthodoxy as the pestilence. It is unsaleable in these lewd days.

Dear Swift:—

Why didn't you hunt me by phone? There was the book, with my name in it in neat nonpareil type, and yet you done [sic] it not. Verily, the simplicity of rustics is passing belief! I spent all day Sunday—that is, until after dark—eating and snoring. Then I came to the Sun office—and missed your note. I have had nothing to do with the Sundaysunpaper [sic] for 18 months. Since last April I have been at work on the eveningsunpaper [sic]. Why didn't you ask at the office? Donnerwetter! Your note got to me this morning and by devious route.

I am mighty sorry that I missed you. We have just started a new and decent club and it would have been a pleasure to lead you to it. No; there is no bar. Those members whose gullets burn for the hot and treacherous rum must bring it with them. As for me, I eschew the dirty stuff, and lead a godfearing life. Dr. Henry M. Wahrton [sic],⁵ in his palmy days, was never so sober. Even old J. Card has nothing on me.

Tell Prince to let me have that new book of his the moment it drops from the press. In a few days I'll send a copy of "Men vs. the Man" for your joint elevation. The book is in two sections. You read half and let Prince read half. Then have at each other with musketoons.

Incidentally [sic], what were you doing in Baltimore? Let the truth come out.

My dear Swift:—

I'll use the untrue anecdote of the archepiscopal gent May 3, not changing a cent. But if he lands the pallium I shall expect him to put in a good word for me with the heavenly ticket-choppers.

How are you, anyhow? It is bruited about down here that you are a father. Here's hoping that the young one is fat and disorderly. What are you doing—teaching students to write local briefs? That "master of English" has a defiant sound. I have a good mind to dig up some of your old copy and show how you used to split infinitives.

Baltimore, Feb. 15th. [1911]

Dear Swift:—

You tempt me as no painted harlot ever tempted a holy friar. It would tickle me to death to discourse from that academic rostrum, or stump, or pulpit, or whatever you learned devils call it, and it would consume me utterly to cavort in that hangman's gown, listen to that Platt-Latin and depart with that certificate of decency, but behold, there are obstavles [sic] in the way, to wit:

1. I know nothing about sociology.
2. My stage presence is disgusting.
3. I have no voice for public speaking.
4. It would take five kegs of beer to neutralize my stage fright.
5. Nearly all of my published writings have derided the faith and trade of the good Dr. R.⁸
6. I am notoriously no Christian.
7. I am ditto unlearned.
8. If I entered as a candidate you would be confronted by irresistable [sic] temptations to blackmail me.

9. Once they see me they will set the wolf-hounds on me.
Seriously, I doubt that the business could be managed. I have had a good many invitations, during the past two years, to roar from the stump—one, by gum, from a Yiddish synagogue in Pittsburgh!—and I have been thinking of writing a lecture on the modern drama and trying it out on some docile dog—perhaps the Women's Club at Roland Park.

If ever I come to it, and the natural shrinking of a modest man is overcome, I'll take to the academic circuit and go in for wholesale uplifting. This lecture, of course, will have a certain amount of sociological flub-dub in it,—the influence of the drama upon public opinion, for example—Oscar Wilde's old idea of the effect of art upon life. But all that belongs to the dim and misty future—maybe to the never-never.

Don't think I miss the value of the A.M.—or even of the D.D., for that matter. It would help me a lot in the job I am now thinking of tackling seriously, to wit, the thorough editing of the Ibsen prose plays. Two experimental volumes were sent out two years ago.⁹ Now, if the publisher comes down with the mazuma, I am ready to do them all, with learned introductions, bibliographies and copious notes—a truly punditic enterprise. I have four wash-baskets full of notes. But I have done so much bawling against the established gods of Christendom, in my "Nietzsche", in "Men vs. the Man" and in my book-reviews, that I doubt if any committee of god-fearing men would be so lacking in humor that they could find it in their hearts to let me pass.

Yet I thank thee, O Swift, as good a friend and honest, worthy rebel against the fitness of things. If I ever get that lecture wrote [sic], I'll send you a copy, and if it fits into any course of torture that you are perpetrating upon the innocent scholars of your seminary. I'll [sic] be glad to yodle it—provided, of course, the trial upon the dog shows that I can yodle. Meanwhile, I am looking forward anyone [sic] to a visit to your fair city. This accursed slavery must have an end. I must get about and see my friends. My best wishes to Mrs. Swift—and my archepiscopal blessing on the infants.

When is Prince's book due?¹⁰ If it comes along within the week, I'll be able to get a notice into the April S.S., out March 15. But the last call for copy in on the 20th.

I wish I could run up to see you and your posterity, but I am saving up holidays to go to Germany in the Spring. That is, if the fates are kind. What are you teaching the god-forsaken prisoners in your pedagogic bastille [sic]? Down here sex hygiene has crowded out all other subjects in the curriculum. ⁹Mencken collaborated with Holgar A. Koppel, the Danish counsel at Baltimore, to produce texts of two Ibsen plays based on the definitive Dano-Norwegian text. Koppel translated from the Dano-Norwegian and then Mencken compared the translation with several German translations, thereby perfecting their text. Both volumes, Little Eyolf and A Doll's House appeared in 1909 from the Boston firm of John W. Luce & Co. However, both books were commercial failures, generating no royalties whatsoever. Mencken decided not to pursue a project of editing the complete plays of Ibsen.

Once Upon A Campus

Top: Deer roam where Drayer and Morgan Halls now stand. Moorland, former home of Johnston Moore, class of 1829, was purchased by the College in 1932. Middle left: Architect Benjamin Latrobe contributed this drawing of what is now Old West. The building was called New College until 1836. Middle right: The pagoda, a campus landmark from 1871 to 1887, stood in front of Old West arrayed in "white and chrome yellow, touched up with Indian red and ultramarine blue." Bottom: the James William Bosler Memorial Library Hall was completed in 1886. Alterations in 1941 enlarged and transformed the building. In this scene, apparently ca 1890, College Street is still residential.

The Denny family property (left) was purchased by the College for $100—on condition that the building placed there be a Denny Memorial. The second Denny Hall standing on the northeast corner of High and West streets was built in 1905. Not long after its construction in 1885, Tome Scientific Building (below) was photographed. This card, ca 1891, shows Louther street still a dirt road.

From the West street side of Old East, now the Bernard Center, it was possible to look toward Allison Church, then on the southwest corner of West and High streets (right). What is now the president's house is visible beyond it. This end of Old East was the president's home until 1890. This Allison Church burned in 1954.

Baccalaureate takes place in front of Baird Hall (left) in 1954. The building was the Mooreland Park mansion until purchased 1932, named for Spencer Fullerton Baird, class of 1840, and used for biology. Baird Hall was demolished in 1966 to make room for Witwer Hall.

Conway Hall (above), formerly in the area where Spahr Library now stands, was completed in 1902 and razed in 1966. It was used for the preparatory school and then as a men's dormitory. Andrew Carnegie financed the structure to honor his friend Moncure Conway, class of 1849.

South College has had three incarnations. This (right) is the second one, built in 1838 and torn down to make room for Alumni Gymnasium in 1927.

This former Pomfret Street home (left) was acquired in 1893. It was occupied by Alpha Zeta Phi until 1895 when it became a residence for coeds called Ladies Hall. Renamed Lloyd Hall in 1905, it was sold in 1919 and torn down in 1969. The site is now a parking lot.

George Metzger, class of 1798, bequeathed money and land (on North Hanover Street) to found the Metzger Institute, a college for young ladies. This building (below) was erected in 1881. Dickinson leased the property in 1913 for a dormitory for coeds. The property was sold in 1963 and two fast food stands are now there. This view, ca 1890, shows Hanover Street as a rutted dirt road.

GERONIMO!

"STAND-UP"

The inside of an air force C-141 looks like the rib cage of a prefabricated whale.

"HOOK-UP"

"It's easy to jump from a jet. All you do is walk to the door and the draft sucks you out," says the fledgling paratrooper.

"EQUIPMENT CHECK," the jumpmaster's voice bites through the noise. The count-off. Green light. "GO! GO! GO! GO!"

Twelve hundred and fifty feet over Georgia red clay and turpentine pines, Dickinson senior Joyce Hutton has just been whisked out of the back of a huge air force aircraft. An advanced ROTC cadet, Joyce is making her first of five jumps needed to earn her airborne wings.

"I was scared to death," she grins, and her eyes laugh as she says this. "The only hard part is stepping out of the airplane. Then I felt the shock of the opening parachute, and I looked up at the canopy and said, 'Oh. This is fun!'"

Joyce is one of 61,000 college students throughout the nation enrolled in Army ROTC programs. She is one of 16 advanced cadets at Dickinson. For her, the first step to "going airborne" was opening her college mailbox one day in her sophomore year and finding a form letter describing the two-year ROTC program.

Interested students could attend a six-week summer camp at Fort Knox, Kentucky learning basic military skills. "There was no obligation," Joyce says. "If you didn't like what you were doing, you could quit and leave any time. I enjoyed it."

Returning to Dickinson after the summer, Joyce decided to stay in the program. It would result in a commission at graduation and that means a job and possible help with her plans to go to med school.

"Evidently I had done pretty well at basic camp," she remembers, "because when I got back to Dickinson, I was offered an ROTC scholarship for my last two years in college." The scholarship pays all tuition and fees, books and expenses, while also providing $100 each month for subsistence to help offset the cost of room and board.

Joyce is not gung ho military nor an Army brat. Her father is a Baptist minister in Baltimore, and she is majoring in Latin and biology. She wants to be a doctor.

During her junior year she learned that the Army awards full scholarships to the Uniformed Services University of Health Sciences. That's the Department of Defense medical school. If she is accepted she'll attend at no cost and be paid by the military at the same time. The program at USUHS is similar to most med school curricula, and after she graduates she'll be required to serve six years in the Army as a physician.

"The scholarship is a good deal, and attending USUHS at Army expense is a super chance," says Joyce. Already a highly motivated student, one has to be to take a double major in Latin and biology, the possibility of free medical schooling has heightened her desire to excel.

Taking ROTC courses in leadership and management at Dickinson during her junior year, prepared her for "my second summer vacation with the Army." This, ROTC's advanced camp, is held at Fort Bragg, North Carolina, home of the famed 82nd Airborne Division. Morale among airborne soldiers in the division is high, and since the soldiers served as instructors and demonstrators in summer camp, their enthusiasm was caught by many ROTC cadets.

Toward the end of advanced camp, Major Ken Gifforn, assistant professor of military science at Dickinson and an officer in the ROTC summer camp program, called Joyce into his office. "How would you like to go to airborne school?" he asked her.

"No, I said, I really didn't think I wanted to. The six-week camp was over, and I wasn't sure that I wanted another three or four weeks of Army life as a cadet right then," she remembers telling the major. Walking out of his office, Joyce was half-way down the street when "it dawned on me that I very much wanted to do that... so I ran back and asked if the billet was still open."

"I called my parents and said 'I have a surprise for you! I told them I was going to airborne school. My mother cried as I suspected she would," Joyce smiles, "but now that it's over she's getting used to the idea."

Joyce is a feminine woman, not an amazon. While it's hard to see her pixie face squinting down a rifle barrel, it's even more difficult to imagine full combat gear and two parachutes strapped to her short, slender frame, let alone picture her yelling "Geronimo" as she leaps out of an airplane thousands of feet above the ground.

"Carrying the equipment was hard. You always have a steel pot, your parachute and reserve chute, your combat pack below your reserve chute, and a case on the side with your M16 rifle in it.

"The whole combat kit is supposed to weight 95 pounds," Joyce continued, "but for the practice jumps, mine only weighed 25." Added to 25 pounds for the main chute and 10 for the reserve, Dickinson's diminutive Joyce was toting 60 pounds of extra baggage.

"Aside from some physical conditioning, all jump school stressed was safe landing, and that meant keeping your knees and feet together. If you land the right way you don't break anything. By the time you make your first jump, even if you don't land exactly right, you don't get hurt," she says.

After two weeks of training, Joyce made her first jump.

"It seemed as if I were floating in the sky forever," she laughs, "being so light I came down pretty slow. It probably took only a minute but it seemed like five.

"It was great, fantastic. I did it! I actually did it!" She was ecstatic when she landed. "But then you have to bundle your chute and everything up and run for the bus, and you say 'I don't ever want to do that again'."

After the first jump, there wasn't much time to concentrate on the view. "You try to steer your chute as close to the buses as possible so you don't have to run so far.

"You can maneuver a chute in the air. The newer parachute has toggle knobs you can pull to turn you where you want to go." Again that smile from Joyce, "It is like driving in the air."

With five practice jumps, one of them at night, under her belt, Joyce headed home to Baltimore, changing her fatigues and jump boots for the jeans, a top, and sneakers of a student.

Now in Rome studying Latin through a Stanford University program, Joyce will be back on campus in January to finish her senior year at Dickinson. Though she'd like to jump from an airplane again, she's not sure when she'll get another chance. Jump school for Joyce was a challenge; medical school will be also.

However, when she completes medical school and goes on active duty, she'll be the second airborne woman doctor in the history of the Army. "I'll settle for that," she says, "but I do enjoy being first."

Trustee Death

Trustee Rolland L. Adams '27 died Saturday, September 1. He was elected to the board in 1961. The trustee was largely responsible for the construction of Adams Hall dormitory and for chairing a national campaign to develop Dickinson campus facilities.

An active civic leader and philanthropist, he was the first national chairman of a ten-year capital development campaign at the college during the 1960s which ultimately raised more than 21 million dollars. Mr. Adams served for three years as chairman of the Board of Trustees' committee on nominations and membership. He was also a member of the board's executive committee and a former member of its committee on finance and investments.

Citing Adams' continuing sense of public service, Dickinson awarded him an honorary Doctor of Laws degree in 1966.

Adams, publisher and president of the Bethlehem Globe Publishing Company, went to The Globe-Times in the 1930s during the depression and saved the newspaper from financial ruin. After 40 years at the company, he retired in 1970, turning over the newspaper's ownership to his three daughters and their husbands.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Marjorie Hoffman Pollock Adams; three daughters, Nancy A. Taylor of Bethlehem,

A Report on Continuing Education at Dickinson

Margaret D. Garrett

Continuing Education is Dickinson's commitment to community service, to her alumni, and to her belief in the potential for further growth and learning throughout adult life. Seen from that perspective, certainly Continuing Education is nothing new to the College. Yet within the past five years returning adult students have become hot copy, not only in educational journals, but also in the popular press. Has Dickinson's program been changed by this new force in educational life?

As most alumni know, the College does not rush into anything. We did not instantly create an evening program, a weekend college, or begin sending faculty out to teach in local industries. Perhaps we should consider such innovations. We would like to know the alumni's thoughts on such departures from our traditional residential program.

Nevertheless, during the past three years, Dickinson has taken some steps to make adult students feel more welcome on campus. The Office of Continuing Education was created in 1976, and one of our first jobs was to provide the administrative structure for counseling and placing adult students in our regular classes. This semester 40 adult students are registered for almost 60 regular college courses. While several are simply auditing classes for their personal enrichment, the majority are taking these classes for academic credit, hoping eventually to matriculate as full-time students and to earn their bachelor's degree.

As I talk with these adult students each semester, I am struck by their appreciation for our faculty and for the opportunity to study. I am also impressed with their enthusiasm for the younger college students whom they find perceptive in classroom discussion and friendly and helpful to adults in their classes.

For the past three years, we have also experimented with special classes designed only for adults. The faculty has been most gracious in working out readings and discussion on a variety of topics from deaf communication to women in literature. These courses carry no academic credit, but seek to provide the atmosphere in which educated adults can continue to read, study, and share their ideas with other adults. And the faculty has also shared its time and talents to present a Summer Chautauqua Series that offers lectures and musical evenings each Wednesday throughout the summer to members of the community.

Working with George Stehley, director of alumni relations, we have provided a range of special programs for our own graduates: the Alumni College in June of each year; special mini classes at Homecoming and Alumni Weekend; and a special New Directions program which allows alumni who may have developed an interest or a need for a different major field since graduation to return to Dickinson on either a part-time or full-time basis to complete an additional major. In addition, the Carlisle Alumni Club works with us to present an Academic Open House each fall, so that area residents may visit a week of classes in any discipline.

All of these special options for adults have been developed within the context of the College's liberal arts philosophy. Now that the quality of continuing education programs that have sprung up overnight are being re-appraised and often found wanting, you may be glad of Dickinson's cautious but steady development of options for the adult learner. As we continue to appraise our commitment to the community, especially to the adult student, we would appreciate hearing alumni views on how far and how fast the College should move to serve this special kind of student.

PACU Election

President Sam A. Banks has been re-elected to the executive committee of the Pennsylvania Association of Colleges and Universities (PACU) for 1979-80.

Dr. Banks has been a member of the PACU executive committee since 1976.

Founded in 1896, PACU is an association of the presidents of 118 public and private colleges and universities in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. The organization provides a forum for discussion of common concerns and speaks on behalf of higher education in the Commonwealth.

In the same election, Marvin Wachman, president of Temple University was voted PACU president; William H. Federsen of Williamsport Area Community College, vice president; and Frederick P. Sample of Lebanon Valley College, secretary-treasurer. All officers were elected to one-year terms.

Energy Council

Professor Priscilla Laws of the physics faculty has been named to the Governor's Energy Council. The Pennsylvania group, which has 18 members, was appointed in August by Lt. Gov. William Scranton, III.

Other members of the council named this summer include utility officials, a Penn State professor, and representatives of environmental groups. The rest of the members are elected and appointed state officials.

Annie Besant

The February '79 issue of The South Place Ethical Society Journal features an article on Annie Besant, shared with the editor by Walter E. Eliot Porter chats during the Friends of the Library reception.

Friends of the Library

The Friends of the Library held their annual reception on Alumni Day in May. Featured in the May Morris Room were Eliot Porter's photographs on Antarctica and Charles Coleman Sellers's writings. Both men received honorary degrees at commencement.

At the same time the library received several gifts, most notably a collection of 10 rare 16th and 17th century art books, including one incunabulum given by Mrs. Eric Wollencott Barnes. The gift is in memory of her husband who was chairman of the Dickinson English department (1946-53) and founder of the Mermaid Players.

The library also received as a bequest the library of Murray Spahr '12. Eliot Porter gave the library one of his original photographs, and friends contributed to the purchase of two others.

New committee members elected at the annual meeting in the spring were: Yale Asbell '78, John W. Aungst, Jr. '43, Jeff Blinn '80, Prof. Truman Bullard, Shaw Mudge, Jr. '76 and Herbert Gilman Wing '48.

John and Mary's Journal, No. 5 appeared this summer featuring articles on Foxe's Book of Martyrs, Thomas Cooper, and Andrew Carnegie.

For information on membership write Friends of the Library, Spahr Library, Dickinson College.

Food Honors

Dickinson College's food service has received finalist honors in the annual menu idea exchange contest sponsored by the National Association of College and University Food Services (NACUFS).

According to Wayne Modny, director of Dickinson's food service, the award ranks the college's residence hall dining program second among the 250 colleges and universities which entered the contest.

Judges in the contest were particularly impressed with menus prepared by Gino Salisbury, a 27-year veteran of the college food service staff. In addition to submitting menus for a month, Modny also described specialties such as cookouts, Italian nights, Mexican dinners, clam bakes, and of course, the gala Christmas dinner.

No matter how well planned, cooked or served, food cooked in a college kitchen "just doesn't taste like home," Modny says. So for variety, students never have the same meal twice in the same month. "How many homemakers can do that?"

which has been built up over the last few years.

Annie Besant was a close friend of Moncure Conway, Class of 1849. The Ethical Society was largely built up by Conway, according to Walter, and is today housed in Conway Hall on Red Lion Square, London. Walter visited there some years ago.

Annie Besant was born in 1847 and died in 1933. Although largely forgotten today, "she was a prolific author and a prominent and controversial figure, almost always in the headlines," writes Colin Fry in the Journal. He adds that she was "a leading figure in every progressive, liberal, and radical movement of her time—socialism, birth control, Home Rule for Ireland, Indian independence, women's rights, trade commission, and the rest."

Former Trustee

J. Millard Tawes, former trustee, died June 25 in Crisfield, Maryland. Mr. Tawes was Maryland's 59th governor and served two terms in office. He was a member of the Board of Trustees from 1959-1967.

Governor Tawes came from a Dickinson family. His brother was A. Wellington Tawes '12 and he had a cousin, Marvin H. Tawes '26. During his lifetime the governor attended several Dickinson alumni affairs on the Eastern Shore and once hosted a Dickinson dinner at the governor's mansion in Annapolis, Maryland.

Alumni Association

A Giant Step Backward

Andrew C. Hecker, Jr. '65

There were many of them there—men and women, from near and from far, the young and the not so young. They were the reunion classes, enjoying commencement weekend in a manner that sometime showers could not dampen.

Members of the class of 1929, remarkably strong in number, were seated at special tables. Members of the class of 1934 were obvious in their red and white hats. Members of the class of '54, as usual, were visible because of their spirit. There was no superhuman effort to get them back. They were there because they wanted to be.

No matter what the class, the alumni had returned to remember, to reminisce and to enjoy the camaraderie which is unique among Dickinson alumni. All of the reunion classes had taken a giant step backward to renew old friendships, to recall good times, and to relish the opportunity to be together again.

Alumni of a college are in an interesting position. Like the Roman god Janus, they look backward and forward at the same time. They are eager not only to remember and to reflect, but also to look ahead, to assure the same opportunities for others through their college that they were able to enjoy.

The course of the Alumni Council has been charted accordingly during the past several months. Its Alumni Programs Committee works hard to make alumni visits to the campus thoroughly enjoyable experiences.

At the same time, other special committees work throughout the year to gather information from alumni for communication to the college staff and to obtain data from the college staff for communication to alumni. Lines of communication have been established with the support of Dr. Sam Banks and his senior staff so that the Alumni Council can be a conduit for information to and from alumni in the fields of admissions, student life, academic affairs and undergraduate relations. Please make sure that you are a part of the process of communication, a part of working together for the good of the college, by communicating your thoughts, concerns, and interests to the members of the Alumni Council who are identified on the back cover.

The Alumni Council has launched a major effort to improve its coordination with local alumni clubs. A special committee of the council is hard at work, exploring ways in which to provide, on a regional basis, activities which are of interest to Dickinson alumni. Thoughts on this project will be particularly welcome.

Last May, it was fun to take that giant step backward. We will do it again and again over the years. At the same time, as alumni, we look forward to helping the college to continue its giant steps forward.

Phi Kappa Psi

Dr. George Shuman, Jr. '37, vice president emeritus, was featured in the spring issue of The Shield, publication of Phi Kappa Psi. He is chapter advisor and is secretary-treasurer of the Dickinson Alumni Chapter of Phi Kappa Psi. The campus chapter celebrated the 120th anniversary of its founding with a symposium in the spring. The vice president emeritus has served the chapter for 40 years and alumni of Phi Kappa Psi established the Dr. George Shuman, Jr. Fund and the Dr. George Shuman, Jr. Award.

1978-79 Dickinson College Gift Report

As the new President of Dickinson's Board of Trustees, I'm pleased that my first words to alumni and other friends of the College can be "Thank you"! I want to express my sincere appreciation to those who made gifts to Dickinson College during the past fiscal year. 1978-79 was a banner year in terms of voluntary support, with over $2,000,000 received for all purposes. That is a wonderful vote of confidence, and I ask for your continued participation.

The Dickinson Fund surpassed its goal of $410,000. The Fund continues to be the backbone of support for current operations. The gift societies were of particular importance to the Dickinson Fund. Members of the John Dickinson Society ($1,000 and up), the Benjamin Rush Associates ($500-$999), the Gilbert Malcolm Fellows ($100-$499), and the Honor Roll ($50-$99) provided the leadership for another successful year.

Gifts for capital purposes were especially significant in 1978-79. Over $1,400,000 in total gifts and grants were received. Most of these gifts are working through the Capital Development Campaign for the construction of the Life/Sports Learning Center and the expansion of Dickinson's endowment.

The following report lists all alumni, parents, organizations, and other friends who contributed to the College during the past fiscal year. All types of gifts are represented—contributions by individuals, organizations or foundations, in addition to corporate matching gifts, bequests, gifts-in-kind, trust agreements, and gifts to the library.

Vice President in Charge

Receiving a promotion is always a pleasant experience, and when Ruth C. Todd '46 was recently named vice president in charge of nursing at the Lancaster General Hospital, she was just as excited as she could be.

But, for Ruth, the joy of her promotion was not strictly a personal thing. As the hospital's first woman vice president she feels she has taken a giant stride on behalf of nurses and women everywhere.

She prefers to think of herself not as the only woman vice president, but rather as "the first in what I hope will be a long line of such."

A graduate of Johns Hopkins School of Nursing, Mrs. Todd worked as an industrial nurse and as a visiting nurse in Philadelphia before taking a four-year break for marriage and motherhood.

She joined the staff at the General in 1961 and was named director of nursing five years later. In that position she supervised the 750 nursing personnel who care for the sick at Lancaster General, but she's never lost sight of the fact that "I'm a nurse first and a boss second."

With all the technology that has overtaken the medical world in recent years, Mrs. Todd feels the role of a nurse is changing. Nurses now have to deal more with machinery and technical things. However, she emphasizes to her employees the importance of staying close to the patient.

If a nurse leaves her profession for several years while she raises a family, it becomes difficult to keep up with the changes, Mrs. Todd feels. That is why she favors nurses attending refresher courses before they decide to resume their professional work.

Rafton of Central Bank

He has been a research attorney to a California Supreme Court Justice, had his own law practice and investment counseling firm, and was the brains behind the idea of portable classrooms.

Now, Michael G. Rafton '47 is chairman and president of Central Banking System, Inc., the first intrastate bank holding company in California, and parent of Central Bank, with 58 branch offices and 1700 employees throughout the state.

He is an author and lecturer, and conducts a weekly radio broadcast of financial information throughout Northern and Central California.

District Court Judge

Sylvia H. Rambo '58, sworn in as a U.S. Middle District Court Judge, was characterized by the district's chief judge as being able to provide "the kind of help we were hoping and praying for."

Sylvia Rambo, a former Cumberland County Common Pleas Court judge, is the first woman to ascend to the federal bench in the Middle District of Pennsylvania.

Judge William S. Nealon of Scranton administered the oath during August in Courtroom No. 2 of the Federal Building, in which Rambo will preside.

Judge Rambo was enrobed by her husband, Carlisle attorney George F. Douglas, Jr. '50, whom she thanked for "indulgence" during the six-month confirmation process.

Her commission from President Jimmy Carter was read by Dale F. Shughart '34, president judge of Cumberland County Court. In it, Carter said he was "reposing special trust and confidence" in Rambo.

The new judge was presented to the court by Burton R. Laub, dean emeritus of Dickinson School of Law. Dean Laub said Judge Rambo ers Academy, and Michael, a 7th grader at St. Leo's School, shared the occasion with many loved friends. Missing from the celebration was DAVID '81 who transferred from Dickinson to the University of Arizona.

has the "compassion, understanding, mercy, knowledge, integrity and wisdom" needed in the lifetime job.

The new judge said many of those who attended the ceremony "have had a very significant influence in my career.

"It must be said that in my legal career I have had the good fortune of receiving from the members of the bench and bar their support, encouragement, and treatment as an equal."

Nealon said the Dickinsonian will help in "carrying a very burdensome caseload." He noted that the district disposed of 1,556 cases, or an average of 519 for each of the then three judges, last year. The national average is 348 per judge. Judge Rambo's is one of two Middle District posts created when Congress authorized 152 new judgeships.

District Court Judge Malcolm Muri said that one of the hefty cases already turned over to the new judge involves alleged race-fixing at Pocono Downs Racetrack and 21 defendants.

Judge R. Dixon Herman, who is also based in Harrisburg, welcomed Judge Rambo, saying the Middle District is "probably one of the busiest district courts in the United States."

Besides her professional and academic background, speakers pointed out that Judge Rambo plays volleyball with the Cumberland County Bar Association and sings in her church choir.

The new judge said she has met in the last several weeks with the other federal judges in this district. "I find the cooperation and spirit of camaraderie to be infectious, not only with the bench, but with the staff and supporting agencies," she said.

The "joy and excitement of this moment is tempered," the judge said, "by the realization of the great responsibility before me."

One of those responsibilities is expected to be the Three Mile Island class action suit. Federal sources say the case probably will be transferred from Judge Herman to Judge Rambo.

A Rabbinical Mime

Rabbi Henry Shreibman '74 can deliver a spiritual message on any subject from the Creation to Cain and Abel—all without uttering a single word.

Shreibman, who also goes by the name "Everyman," practices both pantomime and Judaism in Philadelphia.

As a student Rabbi, he has served at the Jewish Home and Hospital for the Aged in New York City and at Congregation Am Haskalah in Allentown.

As an artist, he teaches mime at the Philadelphia College of Performing Arts and performs his own repertoire at the drop of a glove.

"Pantomime is an extension of my ministry," the 27-year-old mime said. "It is taking a gift that God has given me and sharing it with others."

Describing how art and religion "form a neat and important balance," in his life, Shreibman hopped up and down, gestured, and emphasized his words with mime. His center-city apartment, which is decorated with large mirrors for practicing pantomime and Jewish symbols and books, seemed to express the man's unusual talents.

"To people on the outside, the combination of pantomime and religion sounds strange," he said. "But religion and drama go back together to the Book of Job and before. They are an ancient combination."

Shreibman attended Hebrew University in Jerusalem for a year and worked on his doctorate in the Bible at Columbia University.

He later traveled to Paris where he met Marcel Marceau. "I won't say that I studied under Marceau," he said. "But I am certainly a follower of his. I still correspond with him."
