Gentlemen:

Washington 16 April 1828

Your reported has this morning made me to say, "that every cent laid upon Molasses, would operate to give the farmer two or three cents a bushel on his grain. I never expressed such an opinion. I did say, that every three gallons of Molasses, imported into this country, to be manufactured into New England Rum, would take the place of one bushel of corn or rye: and that for each cent per gallon which was added to the price of whiskey, the distillers in my District could, & did give an additional price, of between two & three cents per bushel for grain. You will please to publish this correction.

Yours respectfully

James Buchanan

Messrs Gales & Seaton

N.B. There was an entire misapprehension of what I said in relation to the deposed Slaves; but as that question does not so immediately affect my patron of the Country, I do not deem that it should be corrected.

Gentlemen: /

Your reporter has this morning made me to say that every cent laid upon Molasses, would operate to give the farmer two or three cents a bushel on his grain. I never expressed such an opinion. I did say, that every three gallons of Molasses, imported into this country, to be manufactured into New England Rum, took the place of one bushel of corn or rye: and that for each cent per gallon which was added to the price of whiskey, the distillers in my District could, & did give an additional price, of between two and three cents per bushel for grain.
