BIOGRAPHICAL NOTE

Jack Radcliffe is a photographer known for his emotionally powerful photography. Born in Hillside, NJ, Radcliffe received his bachelor's degree from Grove City College and then was drafted into the Marines in 1966. After he left the Marines, he continued for a master's degree from the University of Maryland at College Park, and later his PH.D. in sociology. Radcliff also worked with inner-city youths through the Upward Bound program.

Radcliffe's career changed directions in 1972 when he applied for an admissions position at Harford Community College (HCC) and was hired. While there, he used his photographs to help with recruiting students. Later, he decided to switch to teaching photography and helps to create the photo degree program at HCC, where he taught until he retired in 2003.

He lives in Baltimore, Maryland.
